THIS IS A HYBRID DIGITAL DOCUMENT IN BOOK LAYOUT

DIGITAL USERS: The entire text of this PDF document is searchable; use your program's "FIND" command. Hyperlinks also appear throughout. To view it in book format with opposing pages, use the appropriate viewing mode with the cover page separate so that odd-numbered text pages appear on the right. A wide screen is essential for convenient two-page viewing. An opposing-page display is, however, not mandatory for the use of this volume.

THE GRAND CANON

NOTE TO NEW USERS

THE GRAND CANON is now a series of four volumes: Volume 1 is in two parts; Part A is the extensive Introduction, Statistics, Surveys and Commentaries, and Part B is the Bibliography. Volume 2 is the Cartobibliography of the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River Regions. Volume 3 is the compendium, Grand Canyon, Colossal Mirror: The Term "Grand Canyon" as Used in Geographical Nomenclature, Analogy, Metaphor and Neology.

This is a definitive source—a canon. The Bibliography (Volume 1/Part B) is effectually the core work of the entire Grand Canyon–Lower Colorado River bibliography project, presented in 32 topically distinct parts. To it is added the separate Cartobibliography containing its own introduction and extensive chorographical notes.

These are supported by the separate, voluminous Volume 1/Part A for several reasons. The work requires documentation that is meant to serve for a long time and to answer questions, particularly when I am no longer able to do so. Users may want explanations for why the material is here, how it was assembled, what it can do for them, and how they might want to move ahead with more ambitious projects. I take advantage of four decades of professional experience I gained while working with researchers in museums and libraries, learning from their needs and expectations, all this during the transition from "analog" to "digital" methods and resources. Editorially inclined users may object to some repetitive information in the Introduction. I counter with the observation that many users who have either grown into or grown up with digitally accessed resources will proceed into this one in the selective, hyperlinked fashion to which they are accustomed, perhaps never noticing the remainder as easily as they would have with a hardcopy product.

The very lengthy "Introduction to Content and Coverage" in Volume 1/Part A explains the history, components, and organization of the bibliography. (The volume contents for Part A are also shown in the present volume on pp. vii–viii). It adds informative surveys and commentaries on bibliography and on where THE GRAND CANON stands with respect to other resources that have been compiled for the Grand Canyon–lower Colorado River region and other regions. Historical and geographical perspectives of the region are provided. Also offered is an argument in support of the continued use of bibliographies in the digital age, and the service this one can provide in revitalized ways long into the future, an inspiration for new projects and partnerships—perhaps even a source for analytical studies utilizing Artificial Intelligence.

—— Approximate geographical area covered in THE GRAND CANON, embracing the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions. It follows the river corridor from Glen Canyon Dam to the river's delta and the Gulf of California. The boundary in the gulf encompasses Mexico's Reserva de la Biosfera Alto Golfo de California y Delta del Río Colorado, and in Sonora embraces part of Reserva de la Biosfera del Pinacate y Gran Desierto. THE GRAND CANON defines "Lower Colorado River" as that region below Grand Canyon, which differs from the hydrological Lower Colorado River Basin that begins below the confluence of the Paria River at Lees Ferry and incorporates the sub-basins of all tributary streams, including the Little Colorado and Gila Rivers.

– – – – – Approximate division between "Grand Canyon" and "Lower Colorado River" thematic regions of THE GRAND CANON.

Base map of Colorado River drainage basin modified from U.S. Bureau of Reclamation, Glen Canyon Dam Adaptive Management Group. The Upper and Lower Colorado River Basins delineate the apportionment of the waters of the Colorado River basin by the Colorado River Compact of 1922; divided just downstream from the confluence of the Paria River near Lees Ferry. Dams and impoundments are indicated on the map. Lighter-gray areas, not labeled, are American Indian reservations. Basin boundary is not depicted in Mexico. (For a map of the physiography and political geography of the Colorado River basin (including Mexico) see in the "Format and Coverage" section of Volume 1/Part A.)

Not only is this personal note a matter of family respect, but after my time the name is bound to be uncorrectably mispronounced. It retains the German back vowel "a" as in the English "sp*a*" or "f*a*ther"; it is not "spammer" nor "spaymer" although in England at least the latter is preferred by some Spamers there. Further, in this current age of digital "spam", a pejorative term, I have experienced a form of cultural censure when my email messages are robotically rejected due to a mistaken connotation with "spammer", sometimes misspelled "spamer" (though why a true spammer would advertise themself openly is beyond me). In 2004 my personal plight even was mentioned by name by the information technology columnist Reid Goldsborough ("Prevent Spam Filters From Blocking Legitimate e-mail," in "Personal Computing" syndicated column in electronic and print media, October 29, 2004). An online-accessible text of this article was found more recently, August 20, 2024:

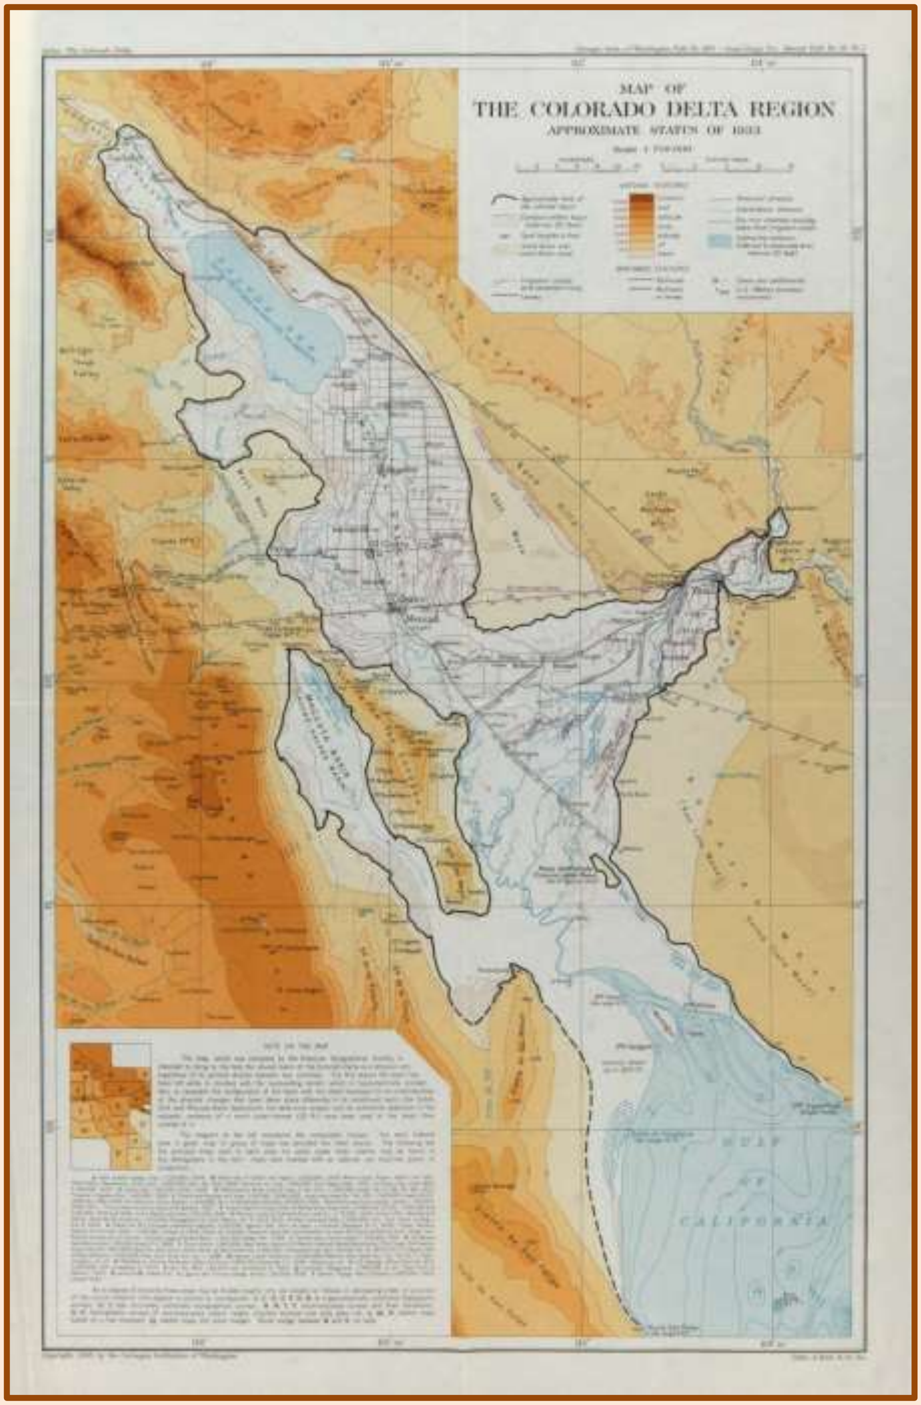
The Salton Sea–Colorado Desert region in contemporary perspective with events of the early 20th century.

Godfrey Sykes, Plate 2 in D. T. MacDougal et al., The Salton Sea: A study of the geography, the geology, the floristics, and the ecology of a desert basin, Carnegie Institution of Washington, Publication 193, 1914 [cited herein as ITEM NO. 11.495].



The Colorado River delta forms a T-shaped area as shown in this map. Historically, occasional Colorado River overflows descended to the northwest rather than to the south and the Gulf of California. During recent times the river has flowed twice into the Salton Sink, below sea level—once in the 1890s when it overflowed naturally to reform the Salton Sea, and again in the early 1900s when an accidental breach of canalworks let it flow catastrophically unchecked for nearly two years to fill the present Salton Sea. For more than a century irrigation in the Imperial and Mexicali Valleys has provided rich farmland in the desert (note the latticework of canals and irrigation drains depicted on the map).

Plate I from Godfrey Sykes, The Colorado Delta, Carnegie Institution of Washington Publication 460 / American Geographical Society of New York Publication 19, 1937 [cited herein as ITEM NO. 2.25806].

NOTE ABOUT HYPERLINKS IN THIS VOLUME

Throughout this PDF (Portable Document Format) volume, occasional URL (Uniform Resource Locator) hyperlinks direct users to various websites and webpages hosted throughout the internet. In the bibliography they most often link to "supplemental" or "supporting" materials for a publication that were posted to publishers' websites. Similarly, various citations will refer to publications by their "doi:" (Digital Object Identifier) number.

All links and identifiers were current at the time of citation but have not generally been updated; the doi's are created to be persistent, but URLs are ephemeral. If a user finds a cited hyperlink that is no longer current, it nevertheless preserves historical and bibliographical perspective. It is not feasible for the compiler to routinely locate updated links because it is not known whether the original URL (or even its domain) has changed, or whether the document has been removed from the host website. Broken links also serve as object lessons of their uselessness to future researchers, although in some cases an archived copy—though one not necessarily perfect—may be accessible elsewhere (for example, through the Internet Archive Wayback Machine, https://archive.org/). Individual users may also have digitally saved or printed some of these materials, which then may be preserved in the individual's collected papers or other collections. In the future such kinds of "light gray literature"* might be rediscovered in unexpected places.

(If readers are using a PDF of any of the SEPARATELY EXTRACTED PARTS OF THE BIBLIOGRAPHY, such as are available at the Raven's Perch Media website, https://ravensperch.org, a hyperlink will be active if it directs to a URL accessible on the web, or internally only if it links to another place inside that part of the bibliography. A link to another part within the whole volume of THE GRAND CANON will not be active because the user is viewing only one extracted part.)

BIBLIOGRAPHY SUBJECT AREAS DESCRIBED

BIBLIOGRAPHIES, INDICES, AND COMPARABLE PUBLICATIONS FOR THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 1 is a guide to other bibliographies, indices, and similar guides to published materials about the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions. The opportunity is also taken to include an Appendix to Part 1, which outlines the changing content arrangement of the Grand Canyon–Lower Colorado River bibliography from 1981 to the present.

GENERAL PUBLICATIONS (HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, SOCIAL, CULTURAL, BIOGRAPHICAL, POPULAR, AND COMMONPLACE WORKS CONCERNING THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS) : PART 2 is by far the largest part of this work; nearly a third of the bibliography. It includes everything that is not categorized by other parts of the bibliography; most notably, everything that is classified as history, geography or biography. It embraces popular and scholarly productions. Part 2 includes everything from commonplace (or "casual") items and notes on the fly, to lengthy monographs.

A great many publications include both the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River; others pertain to the lower Colorado River alone. It is impractical to list "Grand Canyon" and "Lower Colorado River" items separately because of the huge overlap. Instead, what I have done in Part 2 is to specially mark those citations that pertain solely to the lower Colorado region; these citations are identified by their Item numbers in colored italics (for example, 2.13255).[1]

Part 2 includes most items that, in previous bibliographies, had been heaped into a "Miscellaneous" part that was an arbitrary and unhelpful category inasmuch as such wayward items are as "general' as they are "miscellaneous". Part 2 accommodates as well things that relate to, but are not categorized with, material in other parts of the bibliography. For example, it includes publications that pertain to modern social issues of the regions that otherwise are accommodated for their respective parts of the bibliography—such as Part 11, which embraces scientific and technical issues of the lower Colorado River region, but for which issues relating to modern social conditions would be out of place. (Examples include the social concerns that pertaining to Indigenous peoples of this region, and social and labor issues in the Imperial Valley.)

[1] Colored italics are used for aesthetic and pragmatic reasons; color to stand out more on the page, italics in the event that a page in this bibliography is reproduced without the benefit of color, thus the lower Colorado–only items will still be noticeable.

Fiction as such is not included here (for which see Part 7), but works of literary criticism that might pertain to works of fiction are added to this part.

THE NEW YORK TIMES* (GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER ARTICLES AND REPORTS FROM 1851 TO PRESENT) : Part 3 embraces the entire run of The New York Times, from 1851, for the reason that this widely accessible newspaper (first on microfilm, now online) includes every aspect of Grand Canyon and Colorado River history dating to the first American expedition into the region in 1851 (the Sitgreaves expedition). Originally these citations were included as an assist to those researchers who needed to consult microfilm copies, which are widely distributed. Now that the Times is available online in searchable formats, researchers are less encumbered by issues of access; but for continuity the citations are continued forward to the present.

Part 3 is divided into two sections. The first is a comprehensive chronological listing of all citations from the Times; second is an alphabetical list of citations for articles that have an author's by-line.

MEMORIALS : Part 4 contains citations for obituaries and similar contemporary notices about men and women who were in some fashion a part of Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River history, or who died in these places. This part is divided into two sections; the first lists citations by author name, the second groups citations under the names of the decendents. Conventional biographical publications are consolidated with Part 2 of the bibliography.

PUBLICATIONS FOR PEOPLE WITH DISABILITIES : Part 5 contains four sections. Section 1: Publications produced especially for the blind and vision-impaired. This section contains citations mostly for items that are in large-print or Braille formats and audio materials made expressly by agencies who produce materials for the blind and vision-impaired. Other, unusual formats are included, too; for example, tactile material in Moon Type. Many citations have been derived from Library of Congress catalogue records, and of course this part of the bibliography should not be construed to be comprehensive because there are likely to be many products for this audience that are not in accessible catalogs. Section 2: Conventional publications that relate to the experiences of or information of interest to the blind and vision-impaired. Section 3: Publications that relate to people with hearing impairments. Section 4: Publications that relate to people with mobility or activity impairments. Sections 2–4 mostly repeat citations that are included in other parts of the bibliography.

PUBLICATIONS FOR AND BY YOUTH AND YOUNG ADULTS : Part 6 contains citations for material produced for younger audiences, which includes some material written by young authors. This includes school students through the high-school years. Traditionally this is material classified as "juvenile". This part is divided into two sections; Section 1 for non-fiction and Section 2 for fiction.

"Graphic novels", once known just as "comic books", were chiefly for young-reader audiences. In more recent time the genre has evolved to include graphic novels produced for adult audiences. These distinctly newer productions, with themes for more mature readers, are relegated in this bibliography to Part 7. Fiction. Even the "comic book" market of productions originally for younger readers has also evolved to embrace readers of post-adolescent ages, as the attendance at "comic book" conventions and similar events testifies, even though this is driven more by the collectibles market. Nonetheless, following convention implicit young-reader titles (for example, Superman or Justice League of America) remain listed in Part 6, Section 2 of this bibliography.

FICTION : PART 7 contains all works of fiction that are not deemed to be directed to the young-reader audience.

VERSE : PART 8 lists items that are poetry and verse about places or experiences in the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions.

TRAVEL AND TRAIL GUIDES : PART 9 lists material that is explicitly guide information to travel in the region; that is, publications that include information on access, accommodations, and such. These include trail guides, but guides to the Colorado River are relagated to Part 10 of the bibliography. Material that is of a general nature, such as essays on travel experiences, are cited in Part 2 of the bibliography.

COLORADO RIVER GUIDES : PART 10 lists items that are specifically guides to the Colorado River.

SEPARATE-COVERAGE GROUP: SPECIALIZED MATERIAL ABOUT THE LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION (BELOW GRAND CANYON) [PARTS 11 AND 12] : The lower Colorado River is defined in this bibliography as that region between Grand Canyon and the Gulf of California, including the areas of the Salton Sea and the Imperial and Mexicali Valleys in California and Baja California.

The reason that Parts 11 and 12 now comprise a separate-coverage group is that in the 2000 redesign of the bibliography these parts represented an outgrowth of a single "Lower Colorado River" part of the earlier print bibliographies. Since then, Parts 11 and 12 have grown substantially and have been subdivided into thematic sections; and it is not practical to redesign the bibliography to accommodate this special group on its own.

Although it might not seem necessary to include the marine environment of the Gulf of California, its northern end has for millennia been influenced by the outflow of the Colorado River, flush with the mighty, silt- and sand-laden torrents from the continental interior, perhaps at times influenced by the formation of geologically temporary lakes enroute—and, today, absolutely and contemptuously impacted by the complete cessation of river flow, every last drop shunted off to farms and cities, which has had impacts on the environment of the northern gulf. Geologically, the tectonic structure of the gulf is in fact a part of the Salton Trough region; and again, to separate the northern gulf from the lower Colorado is impossible.

PART 11 (Lower Colorado River—Natural History, Environment and Special Scientific, Technical, or Cultural Issues) and PART 12 (Lower Colorado River—Water Supply, Management and Policy Issues of the Lower Colorado River, including infrastructural projects along the Colorado River from lower Glen Canyon, Arizona, to Mexico) are purposely separated from the Grand Canyon focus of this bibliography to facilitate a more sensible breakdown for those users who may be interested only in the special issues of the lower Colorado River region.

To create a separate, comprehensive bibliography for the lower Colorado River region by itself would require that thousands of citations also be copied from Part 2 (General Publications). Duplication of citations on such a scale would seriously, unnecessarily, inflate the bibliography. Thus I have deemed it most effective to separate the "general" publications about the lower Colorado from the more technical publications, to suit distinctly different groups of users.

Users of Parts 11 and 12 of the bibliography will realize there is a very large number of items that constitute "gray literature",[2] specialized publications of usually very limited distribution, often created by governmental agencies or contractors working for those agencies. Similarly, theses and dissertations written as part of an individual's work toward an academic degree are generally "unpublished", yet they are important contributions to their subjects and are in fact available online, through microform, or in hard copy through University Microfilms. While online library catalogs such as WorldCat are quite helpful today in locating some of these documents, many more may have never been cataloged into these systems; many cited herein were found through conventional searches on the web.

Certain specialized areas, such as geothermal energy and related investigations may be found in online sources devoted to these areas; for example, the International Geothermal Association's "Geothermal Confererence Paper Database", online at:
http://www.geothermal-energy.org/publications_and_services/conference_paper_database.html.
The U.S. Department of Energy's Office of Scientific and Technical Information likewise has a comprehensive database, SciTech Connect, which consolidates the contents of OSTI's

Part 11 (Environment, Natural History, and Special Scientific, Technical, or Cultural Issues of the Lower Colorado River Region, with Guides to U.S. and Mexican Topographic Quadrangles)

As indicated in the title for Part 11, this part embraces mostly scientifically and technically oriented material. For the sake of convenience to researchers working within disparate fields of study, Part 11 is now subdivided into three separate sections: Section 1—Environment, Ecology, Biology, and Public Health and Safety. Section 2—Geology, Paleontology, Hydrology, and Related Disciplines; Section 2A—Separately Published Geologic and Special Maps. Section 3—Archaeology, Native American Culture and Issues, and Contemporary Cultural Resources and Preservation. (Note, however, that publications relating to 20th and 21st century social or socioeconomic conditions of this region are consolidated with Part 2 (General Publications) due to their historical perspectives.) Further topical breakdown of Part 11, such as to mirror all the various parts of the bibliography, would be too distracting. Section 3A provides a "General Guide to Documentation for Places in the Lower Colorado River Region Listed in or Nominated to the National Register of Historic Places and the National Historic Landmark System Administered by the U.S. National Park Service.

Regarding Section 1, I have enlarged the geographic coverage of this bibliography to embrace the environmentally protected areas at the northern end of the Gulf of California. With regard to the marine faunas there, the environmental changes caused by the effective cessation of Colorado River flows into the gulf, and the effects of fishing activities, intertwine to such a degree that it is imperative to cite publications that relate to these areas and subjects.

Regarding Section 2, I likewise enlarge the geographic coverage of the bibliography to embrace the regional geological influences expressed in the upper Gulf of California and the Colorado River delta region generally.

Regarding Section 3, the lower Colorado River region hosts Indigenous peoples who have traditional and legislatively administered lands in the U.S. and Mexico. Most items in this bibliography that relate to them are listed in this section. These Indigenous groups and their reserved lands are:

Moapa River Indian Tribe, Moapa River Indian Reservation (Nevada)

Fort Mojave Indian Tribe, Fort Mojave Indian Reservation (Arizona, California and Nevada)

Colorado River Indian Tribes (Chemehuevi, Hopi, Mohave, and Navajo), Colorado River Indian Reservation (Arizona and California)

Chemehuevi Indian Tribe of the Chemehuevi Reservation (California)

Quechan Indian Tribe, Fort Yuma Indian Reservation (Arizona and California)

Cocopah Indian Tribe, Cocopah Indian Reservation (Arizona)

Cabazon Band of Mission Indians, Cabazon Reservation (California)

Torres Martinez Desert Cahuilla Indians, Torres Martinez Reservation (California)

Cucapá (or Cocopa, Xawill kwnchawaay) (Baja California, México; traditional lands in the Río Colorado delta)

In addition, bands of the Southern Paiute people have traditional-use ranges within the northern part of the lower Colorado River region

Subjectively, I have not included probably thousands more citations that pertain only generally to agricultural issues in the lower Colorado River region. These would, in fact, best be the subject of a separate, specialized bibliography, which of course must be constructed from the start. Occasional agricultural items will be found in this bibliography, though. These are included for more specific focuses; for example, aspects of irrigation or taxonomic, ecological, or historical matters in the lower Colorado River region.

As for the peculiar appendage of the Salton Sea region, as also covered in this bibliography, were it not for natural breakouts of the Colorado River to the Salton Sink, the natural history of the lower Colorado River region would not be attached to this bibliography. The Salton Sink (and its historical ancient Lake Cahuilla) is as much a part of the Colorado River delta as that which sinks actually into the Gulf of California. Then, with the anthropogenic breakout of the river during 1905–1907, the whole Salton Sea region—and eventually the Imperial and Mexicali valleys—opened itself in every other respect to the coverage of this bibliography, in terms of geography, geology, and all aspects of human affairs, like engineering, agriculture, culture, and tourism. Thus while a periodic hydrogeologic event let this bibliography embrace the physical Salton Sink, an accident by hapless water managers also forced it to embrace lasting environmental effects and human activities in this region.

In the 4th Edition of THE GRAND CANON, the Appendix to Part 11 was removed and incorporated as Section 4B of Volume 2, CARTOBIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION. It provides guides to the quadrangle systems of topographic maps in the lower Colorado River region used by the U.S. Geological Survey and Mexico's Instituto Nacional de Estadística y Geografía and likewise for geological maps of the Servicio Geológico Mexicano.

Part 12 (Water Supply, Management, and Policy; with Expanded Coverage for Basin-Wide Issues and Unrealized and Unrelated Infrastructural Projects) [3]

Water—its abundance (or lack thereof) and its quality and uses—are the crucial concern of the world's people in the 21st century. In the American Southwest concerns will become as dire as any known in the civilized world, and will without partiality be just as humanly devastating as the shortages in villages of other continents; inevitably with geographical, economic, and political muddling. References in Part 12 of the bibliography will give some case examples of how we in the American Southwest got to the point of imbalancing climate, technology, and legislation—and our perspectives, however limited right now, on how to work with them.

[3] Refer also to the map at the beginning of Part 12.

The water-management citations in Part 12, Section 1 of the bibliography, restricted to the lower Colorado River corridor and its artificial extensions such as canals and powerlines, must by default embrace partly the Grand Canyon and some basin-wide issues. This is mostly due to the proposed construction of dams in the Grand Canyon, which ideas began with power-production facilities proposed for the Colorado at Diamond Creek in the closing years of the 1800s and in the heart of the canyon at the mouth of Bright Angel Creek in the early 1900s. Similar proposals continued for the entire Southwest through the dam-survey period (the 1920s mostly) and during which Hoover Dam was built in the 1930s, and which came famously to a head politically and civilly in the 1960s–1970s with proposals to build two power dams that would have bracketed Grand Canyon National Park (its boundaries were smaller then). Since the Bridge Canyon and Marble Canyon Dams were never constructed, a conundrum presented itself as to where in THE GRAND CANON to cite water-management citations that pertained to proposed facilities in Grand and Marble Canyons. Since these structures, though never realized, were a part of more ambitious plans covering the Southwest, I deemed it more sensible to include these citations in the water-management part of the bibliography for the lower Colorado River.

Regarding the water-management facilities of the lower Colorado River—principally Hoover Dam (Lake Mead), Davis Dam (Lake Mohave), Parker Dam (Lake Havasu), Imperial and Laguna Dams (Lake Martinez), and Morelos Dam (diversion structure for Mexico)—most citations in THE GRAND CANON pertain to the dams and their appurtenant works as well as to administrative aspects of the lakes impounded by them. In the case of Hoover Dam and Lake Mead, a substantial number of citations relate to them; fewer for dams and lakes farther downstream, largely due to the frequent recognition of Hoover Dam in history, engineering, and water management policy. Appurtenant works include, for example, power-production facilities and specialized construction facilities during the building and operating phases.

Productions of cultural resource documentation of significant water-management sites and projects, conducted by the U.S. National Park Service's Historical American Engineering Record, are relegated to Part 11, Section 3 of this bibliography; specifically to citations under "U.S. National Park Service, Historical American Engineering Record" in that section.

Aqueducts and irrigation canalworks in the lower Colorado River region are also covered in Part 12. But no special attempt has been made to provide comprehensive coverage because this material of course carries farther from the lower Colorado River region, where in those destinations there are sure to be a separate bibliography's worth of published material, though out of scope to this one. Items pertaining to the Central Arizona Project are cited herein only when they take note of operations at the Colorado River, or with reference to proposed supporting projects such as Marble Canyon Dam and Bridge Canyon Dam.

Bridges in the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions—the most recently notable of which is the Mike O'Callaghan–Pat Tillman Memorial Bridge, or Hoover Dam Bypass between Arizona and Nevada, completed in 2010—along with other infrastructure that is not related to water-management facilities, are cited in a separate "ancillary coverage" section (Part 12, Section 2). Other bridges include the Navajo Bridges, Kaibab Bridge, and Silver Bridge, and spans on the lower Colorado linking Arizona and California. (Items relating to tramways across or on the sides of the Grand Canyon are relegated to Part 2. Items relating to the Navajo Nation's proposed Grand Canyon Escalade in the early 21st century are included in Part 17. Further omitted in this part are items that pertain to the reconstruction of London Bridge in Lake Havasu City, Arizona. This is a tourism destination that does not cross the Colorado River and has no contribution to the history of lower Colorado River infrastructural projects; thus, items pertaining to London Bridge will be found in Part 2.)

Also listed here are some documents related to Glen Canyon Dam, although the dam is otherwise extralimital to this bibliography. Certain other items that relate to the area, conditions and operation of Glen Canyon Dam, particularly as it affects the region downstream from it, will be found as appropriate in other categories, depending upon whether the subject is related to; for example, general interest (Part 2), administration (Part 13), physical environment (Part 18), biological ecology (Part 19). Construction projects outside the immediate Colorado River corridor are listed with items of general interest (Part 2). And general interest items pertaining to facilities constructed in the Colorado River corridor—such as social, tourism and political issues pertaining to Boulder City, Nevada, that are not related to the actual construction of Hoover Dam—will be found in Part 2.

Many items pertaining to the U.S. Geological Survey expedition (Birdseye Expedition) of 1923 on the Colorado River through Grand Canyon will be found in Part 2 (General Publications). This expedition principally examined potential sites for dams, but quite a lot of general and public interest was reported from and about this expedition. Only specifically technical items relating to the expedition are included in Part 12, Section 1.

Items pertaining to the plans for, construction of, and physical structure of Glen Canyon Dam, as well as items pertaining to Lake Powell impounded behind the dam, are not included in THE GRAND CANON. Exceptions are selected items that relate to effects downstream in the Colorado River as the result of physical alteration of the dam and its appurtenant works or from alterations to the operation of the dam.

The U.S. Reclamation Service (later U.S. Bureau of Reclamation) published the monthly Reclamation Record (later New Reclamation Era and Reclamation Era, in that order). These include monthly updates on the progress of work on the various reclamation projects (for example, the Yuma Project in Arizona and California). Citations for these monthly updates are not included in this bibliography, as users should be aware of these updates as a matter of course, and thus every issue should be examined for a period of time in which the user is interested. At first these reports were published only under the section heading; later, individual reports included by-lines.

Omitted from Part 12, Section 2, are items that relate to the survey for the Denver, Colorado Cañon & Pacific Railroad—the Stanton Expedition—of 1889–1890. It is historically more well known as a Colorado River boating expedition with a photographic record, with significant numbers of items written about it in that context. Never built, few published items relate to the technical details of engineering problems of the railroad; none (of course) to construction news. All citations regarding the Stanton Expedition will be found in Part 2. Items that rely on the historical series of photographs taken during this expedition in Grand Canyon will be found in different parts of the bibliography; for example, citations about general views in Part 2, comparative surveys of vegetation in Part 19 [BIOLOGY AND ECOLOGY], and comparative surveys of sedimentation along the Colorado River in Part 22 [HYDROGEOLOGY OF THE COLORADO RIVER].

ADMINISTRATIVE AND MANAGEMENT ISSUES IN THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 13 of the bibliography relates to administrative issues at all levels, but each as it relates to some geographic or political area embraced by this bibliography. By and large these are government documents, but include public opinion and other publications about issues that pertain to legislative and management concerns. As many as possible of known administrative documents produced by or for federal and state units are listed in this part. However, with regard to legislative documents, such as those of the U.S. Congress and state legislatures, the citations herein should be seen as representative and opportunistic rather than an attempt to provide a definitive list. A comprehensive listing will necessarily have to be an exhausting, separate project.

AS A pragmatic matter of bibliography all items relating to water-management in the lower Colorado River, including legislative and judicial actions regarding dams and other water-management infrastructure, and international treaties and agreements pertaining to these subjects (which might otherwise be relegated to Part 13 of this bibliography), are consolidated in Part 12, Section 1. An exception to this are productions of cultural resource documentation of significant water-management sites and projects, conducted by the U.S.

National Park Service's Historical American Engineering Record, which are relegated to Part 11, Section 3 of this bibliography; specifically to citations in that section under "U.S. National Park Service, Historical American Engineering Record".

SOCIOLOGY, RECREATION, EDUCATION, ECONOMICS, AND RELATED SUBJECTS IN THE GRAND CANYON–LAKE MEAD REGION : PART 14 of the bibliography relates to various aspects of human affairs except, specifically, health and safety issues, which are consolidated with Part 15. The Whale Foundation, a not-for-profit organization, provides services to the Grand Canyon river-guiding community that first included mental and physical health care but which now embraces various matters that relate to social and personal support, and a scholarlship. For the sake of convenience, citations for items produced by The Whale Foundation that are not specifically health related are grouped in Part 14.

HEALTH AND SAFETY IN THE GRAND CANYON–LAKE MEAD REGION : PART 15 lists items relating to human health, safety, and public well-being in Grand Canyon National Park and immediate vicinity. Because the waters of Lake Mead encroach upon the lower portion of Grand Canyon, for bibliographical convenience this part is expanded to include all items that relate to public health and safety in the Lake Mead region overall. Items pertaining to issues of workplace harassment are included in this part. Items pertaining to infrastructure that has direct bearing on the topics of health and safety are included. This part also includes documents on thereapeutic programs, mishaps, rescues, accident investigations, missing persons, and cautionary reports by example.

ARCHAEOLOGY AND CULTURAL RESOURCES IN THE GRAND CANYON REGION : PART 16 of the bibliography relates to archaeology and to aspects of cultural resources including 19th- to 21st-century activities. Some items dated during and after the later-20th century may be available to the public only in redacted versions, wherein culturally sensitive or specific geographical data are omitted or physically obliterated. Unredacted versions will be in files accessible to qualified researchers and administrators. If no note regarding redacted parts appears with the document, or if there is no such note with its citation here, it does not necessarily mean that the document as seen or as available does not have data redacted. One may assume that modern publications in scholarly serials already have been written in such a fashion that sensitive or restricted data are left out. Documents or citations that may have been seen by the compilers that pertain to wholly restricted documents not available publicly are not cited in this bibliography. While thus not properly compiling the body of work of individuals, firms or agencies within the scope of this bibliography, the general unavailability of a document leaves no merit for inclusion within a work such as this one, which identifies publicly available materials.

Included in this part are pertinent U.S. National Park Service summary records for historic sites, which include the Historic American Buildings Survey (HABS), Historic American Engineering Record (HAER), and Historic American Landscapes Survey (HALS) series. Most of these are accessible online through the Library of Congress website. An Appendix to Part 16 provides a "General Guide to Documentation for Places in the Greater Grand Canyon Region Listed in or Nominated to the National Register of Historic Places and the National Historic Landmark System Administered by the U.S. National Park Service.

Archaeological work relating to the lower Colorado River region, including Lake Mead, will be found in Part 11, Section 3; and similarly that section will also contain pertinent HABS, HAER, and HALS reports.

NATIVE AMERICANS IN THE GRAND CANYON REGION : PART 17 of the bibliography relates to Native Americans of, and their relation with, the Grand Canyon and thier traditional lands of the region. By default of their residency at and in the canyon, the Havasupai and Hualapai people are the principal focus of this part of the bibliography; also the nearby Kaibab Band of Paiute Indians. In addition, there are citations that relate in some fashion to the cultural relationships and claims that other tribes and nations have in the Grand Canyon. This is not a bibliographical listing for the tribes in general; only their relationships with the canyon, though more comprehensively regarding the currently resident Havasupai and Hualapai. Some topics that may seem to be out of scope, insofar as the tribal relationships with Grand Canyon are concerned, are nonetheless included here. For example, some citations relate to Havasupai legal claims against Arizona State University, which relate to the unsanctioned uses of blood samples that were given by tribal members to a university researcher specifically for research on diabetes in this community (a disease that disproportionately afflicts many of these people, and notably other tribal peoples as well). While this in itself may seem unrelated to the Grand Canyon, additional studies were conducted with the samples, without the permission or knowledge of those from whom the blood was taken. These other studies arrived at scientific conclusions and social statements, which were published, that are decidedly contrary to the cultural beliefs of the Havasupai people and their relationship with the Grand Canyon. The resolution of these legal issues has provided some positive outcome for the individuals and the tribe. Now the affair remains the subject of worldwide cautionary and instructive attention among bioethecists and legal scholars, citations about which are also included here. Many of these publications produced during the progress of the legal case and thus provide evolving perspectives of the issues prior to the final resolution between the tribal litigants and the university. The effects of this case further emphasize the weight and truth of cultural beliefs.

Ophelia Watahomigie-Corliss, a Havasupai woman who has been a strong defender of Havasupai culture, has noted that ". . . culturally we are taught to never look back or live in the past."[4] While the idea of a bibliography may seem like a contradiction to such teachings, her belief does not necessarily mean that the past is not to be remembered, but that human life is meant to move ahead. A bibliography such as this one does document past interactions and activities, but they contribute to the learning that goes on in the present and prepares people and communities for the future.

Not all of the Native American tribes who exercise cultural claims to the Grand Canyon may have citations listed in THE GRAND CANON, except in a general or summary fashion; only the publications that have come to our attention, and which relate specifically to activities in the Grand Canyon region, are cited herein. The involved tribes (as defined by the federal government) are:

Havasupai Tribe, Havasupai Reservation (Arizona)
Hopi Tribe (Arizona)
Hualapai Indian Tribe, Hualapai Reservation (Arizona)
Kaibab Band of Paiute Indians, Kaibab Indian Reservation (Arizona)
Las Vegas Band of Paiute Indians, Las Vegas Indian Colony (Nevada)
Moapa Band of Paiute Indians, Moapa River Indian Reservation (Nevada)
Navajo Nation (Arizona, New Mexico & Utah)
Paiute Indian Tribe of Utah
  Cedar Band of Paiutes, Kanosh Band of Paiutes, Koosharem Band of Paiutes, Indian Peaks Band of Paiutes, and Shivwits Band of Paiutes
San Juan Southern Paiute Tribe (Arizona)
The Pueblo of Zuni, Zuni Reservation (New Mexico)
Yavapai-Apache Nation, Camp Verde Indian Reservation (Arizona)

An Appendix to Part 17 lists material that was published in The Supai Weekly News and The Supai News, 1957-1959, which was produced by missionaries.

Work relating to the Indigenous cultures of the lower Colorado River region, including Lake Mead, will be found in Part 11, Section 3.

PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT OF THE GRAND CANYON AND THE SOUTHWEST REGION : PART 18 of the bibliography relates to the physical environment; that is, items of physical, chemical, biophysical, or biochemical aspects of land, water, and atmospheric environments of the Grand Canyon region. This includes multidisciplinary research of the environment in the Grand Canyon region and the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon, and climatological and hydroclimatatological investigations relating to the Colorado River basin. With regard to the last subject area, it is necessary to expand the area of coverage to embrace the entire region covered by this bibliography and the American Southwest generally. This is because climatic investigations by nature often encompass rather large geographical regions. With regard to the area covered by this bibliography, many such investigations overlap the entire Colorado River drainage, or sometimes more specifically a portion of Arizona or the lower Colorado River region. In any case, all climatic studies, including those that cover the larger regions, are listed in this part of the bibliography for their topical context and the logical application of them to the artificially restricted area of the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River.

BIOLOGY AND ECOLOGY OF THE GRAND CANYON REGION : PART 19 This part includes documents on biological censuses and the biology and ecology of animal, plant, and protist organisms as occurring in the Grand Canyon region. This part also includes biological reports and studies that have been part of scientific investigations conducted for the purpose of environmental management of public lands in the Grand Canyon region. Also included here are general articles about information on organisms, resources and activities; for example, fishing, hunting, and conservation. Documents that are Environmental Impact Statements, and similar administrative and guidance documents, are included in Part 13 (ADMINISTRATIVE AND MANAGEMENT ISSUES) because they usually embrace multiple areas of administrative oversight, are not solely focused on ecological concerns as might be inferred from the title, and may offer a variety of management alternatives. Exceptions are those documents that are specifically or predominantly biological or ecological in perspective.

GLEN CANYON ENVIRONMENTAL STUDIES PROGRAM : PART 20 comprises a guide to reports and studies that were produced as part of the Glen Canyon Environmental Studies program under the U.S. Bureau of Reclamation; since ceased under that administrative entity. (The GCES programmatic responsibilites have continued as a part of the U.S. Geological Survey's Grand Canyon Monitoring and Research Center, in Flagstaff, Arizona.) The program was implemented to study the effects of, and to contribute to administrative plans for, the operation of Glen Canyon Dam on the downstream environmental and cultural resources through lower Glen, Marble, and Grand Canyons. This part was compiled by Richard D. Quartaroli, then GCES Librarian, and incorporated in 2000 as a separate table originally designed for the former Internet Edition of the Grand Canyon–lower Colorado River bibliography. The GCES program had ended thus Part 20 is complete.

GEOLOGY AND PALEONTOLOGY OF THE GRAND CANYON REGION : PART 21 comprises references to the geology (broadly speaking) of the Grand Canyon region. THIS part comprises references to the geology (broadly speaking) of the Grand Canyon region. It includes regional studies that embrace the Grand Canyon, plus material that examines the stratigraphic continuity of the Grand Canyon's formations. Noticeable among these citations are those that pertain to areas outside of the geographical coverage of the main body of THE GRAND CANON (see the map in this volume's Frontispiece). These extralimital references are important for their focus on correlative stratigraphic and sedimentological analyses that, in turn, reflect upon studies in the Grand Canyon. This is akin to examining the meteorological or climatological aspects of the greater Southwest (as in Part 18 PHYSICAL ENVIRONMENT) since they pertain to effects observed also in the Grand Canyon. Part 21 further includes broad studies of the geologic history of the Colorado River basin, inasmuch as these studies all pertain in some measure to the Grand Canyon and, in turn, the history of the river in the lower Colorado River region. Including these extralimital materials does not greatly inflate the number of citations in this part of the bibliography. Items that relate to the chemistry of surface and ground waters including springs are cited in Part 18.

Part 21 includes numerous extended abstracts of the works by Clarence E. Dutton, most notably his 1882 Tertiary History of the Grand Cañon District. While they were essentially reviews of recently published items, they are in fact lengthy extracts, sometimes with editorial notes. For this reason these extended items appear in this part rather than in Part 30 (REVIEWS AND NOTICES).

Many items pertaining to the U.S. Geological Survey expedition (Birdseye Expedition) of 1923 on the Colorado River through Grand Canyon will be found in Part 2 (GENERAL PUBLICATIONS). This expedition principally examined potential sites for dams, but quite a lot of general and public interest material was reported from and about this expedition. Only specifically scientific items relating to the geology of the expedition are included in Part 21.

Added to Part 21 are items that pertain to theoretical and practical computerized analyses of data that utilize the Grand Canyon topographic model. These are not mathematical modeling studies of the development of actual topography of the Grand Canyon but are landscape imaging studies. Because they use a Grand Canyon elevational data set to analyze the relationships of cells or sets of data points in two- and three-dimensional image representations, I include them within the geology subject area for their use of topographical data sets. But inasmuch as the cited publications do not usually pertain to studies of the actual Grand Canyon, nor are they products that pertain to the canyon, they are not considered for THE GRAND CANON' s separate section on Computer and Interactive Media.

Many citations from publications produced by the Geological Society of America include references to supplementary material in the Geological Society of America's Data Repository. Originally, this material could be requested by mail application to the society, and in the early 1990s a compilation of Data Repository items was available on microfiche, but today all of it is accessible online at https://www.geosociety.org/datarepository/).

Citations that pertain to the Peach Springs Tuff, named originally for occurrences in northwestern Arizona, are for the sake of bibliographical convenience cited in Part 11, Section 2. The Peach Springs Tuff type locality is near Peach Springs, Mohave County, Arizona, and thus falls more properly into Part 21 of this bibliography. However, the unit has more notably been the subject of detailed studies and correlations throughout the Arizona–Nevada–California region, the tuff source area being identified in the Silver Creek caldera of the southern Black Mountains; a majority of the published work pertains to those correlated occurrences and identification of source area, which occur mostly in the lower Colorado River region.

There are in Part 21 a variety of citations that pertain to material that most geologists and other users will consider to be "fiction"; for example, creationist perspectives of geology and paleontology, and the so-called "Electric Universe Theory" that posits extraterrestrial-scale electrical charges as a cause of earth topography. Regardless, all of these still are "geological" in nature, and so are recorded in this section (in the same fashion as which I also include in the part of the bibliography pertaining to archaeology items about the putative "Egyptian" cave of the Grand Canyon). Part 7 of the bibliography, on "Fiction", contains citations for literature purposely so written (and similarly Part 6, Section 2, for fictional works for younger readers).

Publications that relate to creationist and young-earth perspectives of Grand Canyon geology are included in this part with the understanding that this is an ongoing, sometmes tempetuous, field of study that brings ideas of faith up against the tenets and methodologies of empirical and falsifiable science. Accordingly, some users of this bibliography may object to including creationist research with the science-based works of geology. However, these are topically identical so they are not segregated. To assist researchers looking for contrasting perspectives, both for and against creationist-held views embracing the Grand Canyon, these citations are denoted in the bibliography with Item numbers in colored italics (for example, 21.6300).[5]

Omitted from Part 21 are items that pertain to the San Francisco volcanic field. Although this area may be considered together with regional volcanism, such as that of the western Grand Canyon, I have considered the literature on the San Francisco Peaks too great for an area only of the most marginal interest to the Grand Canyon and Colorado River.

Although I have included studies of the stratigraphic continuity of the canyon's formations, I have left out discussions that relate to the canyon's upper Paleozoic strata where they occur at Meteor Crater, east of Flagstaff, Arizona—because these discussions pertain to impact effects rather than to stratigraphic or sedimentological relationships.

Geological maps of this region are separately listed in Part 24.

HYDRAULICS AND HYDROGEOLOGY OF THE COLORADO RIVER IN LOWER GLEN, MARBLE, AND GRAND CANYONS : PART 22 encompasses all physical studies of the water flow of the Colorado River, applied research on its carried and bottom sediment, and the effects of the river's fluctuating flow on the distribution of sediment on the banks of the river. Citations pertaining to the hydrogeology of the lower Colorado River below Grand Canyon are consolidated with Part 11, Section 2 of the bibliography.

GEOLOGICAL FIELD GUIDES IN THE GRAND CANYON REGION : PART 23 This includes all publications that are intended to serve as geological field guides to routes and specific localities in the Grand Canyon and vicinity. Included among them are all geological guides to the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon.

GEOLOGIC AND SPECIAL TOPOGRAPHIC MAPS IN THE GRAND CANYON REGION (WITH GUIDES TO USGS TOPOGRAPHIC QUADRANGLES) : PART 24 lists only separately published maps, and atlas sheets. Regional maps that embrace the Grand Canyon area are included. Similar maps for the lower Colorado River region are consolidated with Part 11, Section 2A.

In the 4th Edition of THE GRAND CANON, the Appendix to Part 24 was removed and incorporated as Section 4A of Volume 2, CARTOBIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION. It provides guides to U.S. Geological Survey topographical quadrangles in the greater Grand Canyon region.

GENERAL AND SPECIALIZED MAPS OF THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : Part 25 no longer exists within THE GRAND CANON, Volume 1. Except for introductory remarks, it has been removed and reproduced as Volume 2, CARTOBIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGION. See more extensive notes with PART 25 in Volume 1, Part B.

AUDIO-VISUAL WORKS AND AUDIO WORKS AND MUSICAL SCORES [PARTS 26 AND 27] : PART 26 (Audio-Visual Works and Photographic Publications on the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River Regions) embraces products that employ the media of sight and sound, which include diverse products such as but not limited to films (silent and with sound), filmstrips, stereoview sets, and over-the-air broadcasts that have been made available on videotape. Part 26 includes two appendices: Appendix 1 to Part 26 General Guide to Commercially Produced 3-D Transparency Products; and Appendix 2 to Part 26 General Guide to Commercially and Governmentally Produced Stereographs.

Similarly, PART 27 (Audio works and Musical Scores on the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River Regions) limits itself to aural products (narrative and musical) and published musical scores. (The scores are listed as a separate Appendix to Part 27.) Citations within these sections have been encumbered by their un-booklike nature, by which even though there are some standardized means of citing them I have had to work around absent data for not having viewed many of them in their entireties. In these cases I have had to rely on data available on packaging materials, on product labels, and sometimes on external reviews or other notices.

SEPARATE IMAGERY IN THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 28 includes only single, extraneous items; for example, a reproduction of a single painting, or specialized folios of prints, without accompanying text other than the legend. Photographs within articles or books that are credited to specific people or sources are not generally listed separately in this bibliography.

COMPUTER AND INTERACTIVE MEDIA ON THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 29 embraces products that have been produced specifically for use on computers. While the definition of such products has blurred—for example, CD-ROM or DVD products including audio recordings can be construed to be "computer media"—the focus of this part of the bibliography is on graphical and interactive material; for example, map programs, interactive travel guides, older-style "screen savers", and games. Audio and audio-visual products are consolidated in their own parts of this bibliography.

While web-based media are omitted due to their ephemeral nature (see below), citations in this bibliography do include announcements and similar items that pertain to digital personal-pad devices ("apps", or applications, as they are known); this is to make known the existence of these products through the publications that were used to promote them. The "apps" themselves are not citable, though. Similarly,the proliferation of digital "citations" that use the square-targeted "QRC" (Quick Response Code, usually referred to as a "QR code" [right] [6]) imprints that embellish publications, posters, signs, and virtually any other place that catches one's attention (at least since the 2010s)? The example shown here illustrates the QR code for the Grand Canyon Association, in 2013. The 2013 volume that presented the proceedings of the 3rd Grand Canyon History Symposium[7] was a first for Grand Canyon-related publications by including QR codes to serve for the citations of web-based resources according to their URLs. These are not pertinent as bibliographical citations even if they were not web-restricted, because they are only machine-readable; those users without the resources to utilize the electronic links are left empty-handed, and when the technology to use them becomes obsolete all users will be left empty-handed.

[6] The QR code is a trademarked form of two-dimensional, or matrix, barcode that is readable by portable digital devices, which redirect the user to pertinent websites and other digitally controlled sites. At present they are targets chiefly for the "smart phone" user.

Regretfully, the 21st century will be partly an intellectual Dark Age, when linked resources cannot be retrieved through the use of these links.

As a rule, items that are posted to websites are not included in this compendium. There are, however, numerous organizational newsletters and comparable documents that have been posted to internet websites in formats that are facsimiles of, or by design mimic, printed-format layouts; judged by appearance and, sometimes, the inclusion of volume and issue numbering. These items are usually posted as PDFs. Many of them have been included in THE GRAND CANON because it is not generally possible to distinguish between those that are available only online and those that have been printed (or otherwise distributed in paper formats); some are copies produced for paper distribution that also have been converted to PDF and posted to a website. One certain way of identifying those that have been distributed in paper format are items that include space for a mailing label and return address. One concession that eventually was made is for an obviously web-posted serial that continues a print version of the serial or which originates a volume/issue number scheme and displays in the fashion of a print publication. These will be included since it is likely that they are intended to be printed out as necessary. Webpage formats that clearly do not reproduce or do not mimic traditional printed-format layouts have been ignored; these include crudely composed items that rely on basic HTML layout and graphics use, clearly designed for web presentation, as well as those that have garish, HTML-composed coloring, animation, and other kinds of graphics that do not or cannot appear in printed works.

BOOK REVIEWS AND SIMILAR NOTICES REGARDING PUBLICATIONS ABOUT THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 30 includes critical reviews at length in scholarly publications as well as promotional reviews, notices in general-interest publications, and cursory editorial or readers' notices. Reviews are included in this bibliography only if they relate to publications about the Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River specifically; otherwise the review must mention the canyon or the river region. Product reviews include those for audio and audio-visual productions, and computer software.

Reviews and notices are arranged by the names of the reviewers. Throughout the rest of this bibliography, citations for the reviewed or noticed publications are accompanied by ancillary notes that cross-list citations in Part 30. For an illustrated example see the explanation of Item numbers on p. 12.

NEWSPAPER GUIDE FOR THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS : PART 31. Newspapers are not generally included in THE GRAND CANON. There are, however, some exceptions. The New York Times is accorded its own section in this bibliography (Part 3), and citations from the earlier years of the Deseret News (Salt Lake City) are placed within pertinent parts of the bibliography. In other instances a newspaper is cited in this bibliography if an article had been reprinted later in another periodical; the original source is acknowledged in a comment at the end of the citation.

Special-interest newspaper-format periodicals are included in the bibliography; for example, High Country News, a mostly biweekly serial. Some weekly newspapers, and weekly magazines included with newspapers, are also cited herein; for example, Computerworld, and Flare from the Arizona Daily Sun (Flagstaff).

Part 31 comprises a listing of regional newspapers that some readers may wish to use to begin locating local (or sometimes online) sources.

MARGINALIA RELATING TO THE GRAND CANYON AND VICINITY : PART 32 This part contains citations which are themselves not about the Grand Canyon but refer to the Grand Canyon as a venue—for example, meetings and conferences about subjects other than the Canyon held at Grand Canyon. Similarly there are marginal references to nearby Grand Canyon locales, which are embraced within this bibliography, and significant commemorative uses of the Grand Canyon name. While these citations do not specifically contain information about the Canyon, they are peripherally a part of the history, awareness and responsiveness to the Canyon, emphasizing its cultural reach globally and in human attentions.

PREVIOUSLY USED PARTS REMOVED

Part 33—"Other" Grand Canyons is no longer a part of THE GRAND CANON. That part, which tracked uses of the term "Grand Canyon" in other geographical locales, was removed in 2009 as a matter of pragmatic bibliography, not truly pertaining to the Grand Canyon except through nomenclature and comparison, analogy, and metaphor. A separate, greatly expanded nomenclatural summary, "Grand Canyon, Colossal Mirror", is now Volume 3 of THE GRAND CANON (https://ravensperch.org).

Part 34—Miscellaneous Manuscripts was removed from the bibliography in November 2003. Originally, I had believed it was prudent to include manuscript materials that were cited by other sources, in order to include those records in the bibliography. However, this is not the purpose of the bibliography. Tracking manuscript and other primary source materials is an entirely separate project, one for someone else to pursue.

50 YEARS
Some Personal Recollections and Reflections

WHAT BEGAN in September 1974 as a bibliography of Grand Canyon geology went on to consume a good part of my life. It's been an interesting evolution.

The bibliography soon was all-encompassing, containing everything concerning the Grand Canyon and the Lower Colorado River country from Glen Canyon Dam to the sea. The ever-expanding volume appeared in paperback in 1981; in concomitant loose-leaf, microfiche, and digital disk versions in 1990 and 1993; as an interactive database online from 2000 to 2021; and as several ballooning editions of a book-format, searchable PDF file first on CD and DVD disks (2012, 2015) then downloadable from a website (2019, 2022, and 2025, with liberal reproduction and fair use provisions to encourage its use and longevity). This personal essay follows the many lives of Bibliography of the Grand Canyon and Lower Colorado River, which now flourishes in multiple volumes as THE GRAND CANON.

The inspiration for this work came when I returned from my second trip to the Canyon. I had visited both rims that year (in May and August), including on this second trip a three-day hike to Phantom Ranch and back on the North Kaibab Trail, a drive to Point Sublime, and a night drive around through Jacob Lake and Cameron to a South Rim arrival after dawn. There I had purchased a copy of William J. Breed and Evelyn C. Roat's newly published Geology of the Grand Canyon, an early contribution to the large library I unsuspectingly was to collect. I thought it would be convenient to have a more comprehensive bibliography for Grand Canyon geology, so the book's own citation and selections from its cited references got it started.

I was beginning a second year studying geology at Rutgers University. While I had had a growing interest in "rocks" since middle childhood (the clambering on them was at first more interesting even while pretending to study them), this was my first immersion into the subject as a science. I had been more interested in astronomy and space exploration for a longer time (I'm still interested), but in the face of less-than-stellar math ability I was going to ground, as it were. And in the previous year as a volunteer in the geology and paleontology department of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia I had been exposed to a new thing—the annotated bibliography, which so fascinated me that I took up its methods. (Twelve years later I went to work in the Academy, remaining for 19 years in several collections-management and publications positions, concluding as the institution's archivist, then I was an archivist for 14 years in the American Philosophical Society's research library, also in Philadelphia.)

There had been "something about" the Grand Canyon that had attracted me for years, even before I had ever been there (nor did I know anyone who had, who might have regaled me with their experience). Now I had performed a geological rite of passage by hiking to the bottom and back—and the collision of place and print had occurred. I started with 4 × 6-inch index cards (ruled, yellow, purchased in a stationery store, which dates myself). Little did I realize what I was getting into. As one of the Academy's curators had recently explained to those who might think of being a registrar of things, "One does not simply sit down and prepare [a catalog]."[8] I found that it was necessary to occasionally catch more than the geology, and it became more than an occasional thing. I also learned that for sharper perspective I needed to go beyond the simple citation. So it began.

The Grand Canyon had become a consuming personal interest. I was, however, just one of a legion who admits to being enthralled with the Canyon and its river—and one of a fewer but unaccounted number who confesses obsession with them. Yet in the summer of 1974 I did not yet know of the players who had participated in the history of this place. They were beyond the geological world I was chasing, but I would soon enough catch up with them.

I sheepishly admit that on neither of my passes through Grand Canyon village that year did I know of Emery Kolb's "picture show," about his photo-run with brother Ellsworth down the Colorado in 1911–12. The film is said to be the longest-running film ever, until Emery's death in 1976.[9] My limited rimside wanderings did not pass by [9] The film, not titled and variously edited over the years, adds views from the Kolbs' other canyon explorations. It was first shown on national tour, then for more than 60 years at the Kolb Studio on the Kolb Studio. I was camping and did not spend much time in the commercial part of the village. Two years later Emery died, aged 94, before I could return to the Canyon. When I did, the studio was shuttered and empty, though in a chance encounter with a kindly ranger with a key I was shown around, and he gave me one of Emery's left-over advertising cards. I missed out on the Emery Kolb experience but felt his presence while I peered through the window from where he had photographed thousands of tourists lined up for their mounted start down the Bright Angel Trail. I was on a mule there once, too, but there was no photographer in the days after Mr. Kolb; no historical remark, no pause either. We just plodded past the studio and on down the trail. Cloppity clop; it was my first experience mounted on a large animal. It was wonderful. Somehow I wound up with a cabin to myself at Phantom Ranch. I spent the free afternoon retracing my steps along Bright Angel Creek and made a short exploration up narrow Phantom Creek. These were my Academy days, and I used the time to continue a bit of research into the distribution of the living mollusks of the Canyon.

The chase I was on was leading me virtually around the world. At first this was exclusively along the shelves and on the tables of libraries and bookstores. Decades later I was surfing the electronic waves of the web. It's one thing to (as I would) occasionally hike and boat there, or fly over the Canyon (and into it, as one once could), or to wander the rims, or sit with a drink watching the scene as a guest at El Tovar or Grand Canyon Lodge; but it's quite another thing to be one of those people who spends a lifetime exploring the Colorado's riverlands through what has been published about them (around the world, no less), to read about livelihoods, impressions, and goings-on. Then in my case particularly, I wound up being one of those contributing authors and editors—from historical bits to scientific studies—all the while being a basic bibliographer chasing down everyone else's work.

Bibliographies entered my life avocationally and professionally. For Grand Canyon it was a passion of unrestrained fascination and an eagerness for more, further fueled by indulgent perseverance. It wasn't just the "who–what–where–when" of publication but more fully their places in the history of the Canyon and how they were

South Rim, as often as four times a day. Emery narrated it himself before audiences in the studio auditorium, but in his later years, after introducing it, resorted to a recording. received. I knew others might be interested in those things so I had to find all I could—not just books but articles, and films, and so on, and on. The motivating purpose was of course to make the consolidated information available. The underlying purpose was to ensure that everything possible was gathered before these items, flung wide in time and place, vanished in the slipstreams of barely noticed or outdated publications or were dimmed by unfashionable interests, changed historical perspectives, and fickle technologies. Fifty years on, I am little closer to a finish than when I began, so it must outrun my life. To perchance quote the person who first ever saw the Grand Canyon, "Damn." [10]

THE BIBLIOGRAPHY was supposed to be restricted to the Canyon. It would have been so much easier had I just stuck with that. But the Canyon is not just the chasm; it is its lands 'round about, and the people there, and all the things that they did and all the things that they discovered and all the things that others gained from their presence and activities—everything. This embraces five centuries of Western incursions, which is nothing compared to Indigenous Peoples' presence from time immemorial. Where to turn first? One learns patience; the method will evolve.

The vast Canyon has a river, which neither heads nor ends there. As I followed its course the area of interest lengthened and broadened to encompass the entire Lower Colorado River country, from Glen Canyon Dam to and into the Gulf of California. It was all about historical, cultural, ethnological, and academic activities along this stream, on its surrounding lands, by all of its peoples, Native and infiltrators alike. Then, to be sure to embrace all the ways the river affects this region, I saw that the bibliography's coverage also had to run off to the West, following a wayward river into the Salton Sink and the Imperial–Mexicali valley that spans the international boundary. All the subjects as which I was chasing for the Grand Canyon country had to be there, too, with some new ones like agriculture, horticulture, husbandry, irrigation, farm laborers' rights, and trans-boundary water use and sanitation.

So then, why is Glen Canyon Dam a bibliographical barrier? Where's the Colorado's Upper Basin in this bibliography? As one follows the river's course upstream from the dam, it branches again and again. Substantially large and mostly-inhabited tributary basins come together, and as one parts from the Colorado Plateau and reaches into the Rocky Mountains there are large tributaries to them in turn—in all, many more in number and more widely dispersed than which are found along the desert journey up from the gulf through the Grand Canyon. Each branch spins its own carrousel of cultural, ethnological, historical, and academic influences. I would have started too late to confidently chase all that, so far from the Grand Canyon without a connection like the Colorado in the Salton Sink. Besides, my own personal experiences, travels, and book-buying and reading have not ventured much into Utah, Colorado, and Wyoming even though I've set foot in all of the Lower Forty-Eight. Neither have I have earnestly joined with others who know a lot about these fascinating rivers and lands and who have lived lives there. I am continually amazed to hear the stories and questions and answers about the places and goings-on in the Upper Basin; there's just so much going on up there. But that's for another lifetime; not mine, now.

[10] "I pictured the predicament of the first man who ever saw that Canyon [. . .] I'll bet he said 'Damn.'" Chester Theodore Crowell, "'Straight down to China', a tale of mules and thrills in the Grand Canyon of Arizona", The Independent (New York), Vol. 105 (June 4, 1921), p. 602.

I have had it relatively easy because downstream from Glen Canyon the Colorado picks up few significant tributaries. I give a little bit of bibliographical lip service to the Paria River. All but the encanyoned portion of the Little Colorado River where it becomes an arm of the Grand Canyon, and all but the confluent portions of the Virgin, Bill Williams, and Gila Rivers, are beyond the scope of this work. I run with and browse alongside the main river without the distraction of having to follow its big tributaries far up to learn their own involved histories in print. It was difficult enough for me to tail the Colorado on its occasional natural and accidental breakouts to refill the Salton Sea and thus to swell the bibliography with all the natural and human histories down there. (Frankly, had I known in advance of all the ancillary history on the whole Lower Colorado below Grand Canyon, I would have stuck with the Canyon. But here I am, fifty years on.)

Thematically, my intended bibliography of "just Grand Canyon geology" flared from one shining point into a supergiant star, swelling and engulfing other bibliographies and indices, and commonplace works, and the entire run of the The New York Times, and obituaries and memorials, and works for people with impairments, and works by and for young people, and fiction, and verse, and travel, and river guides, and administrative affairs, and social works of all kinds, and health and safety, and archaeology and cultural resources and preservation, and Native American peoples' activities and concerns, and the physical environment, and biology and ecology, and the earth sciences, and audio-visual works, and audio works and musical scores, and lone images in print, and computer and interactive media, and reviews of publications and products, and a newspaper guide, and marginalia (explained, which is better than the murky "Miscellaneous" rag bag usually resorted to)—and to this add voluminous introductory notes and essays, and an entire volume devoted to maps of six centuries with chorographical notes and illustrated textual commentaries, and a third volume about all the other Grand Canyons of this and other worlds with all the Grand Canyon analogies, metaphors, euphemisms, and similes that I could find!

Fascination, indulgence, obsession. Patience. I was asked by more than one person how I did it. I replied, surely unsatisfactorily, "you just take the time."

IN THE LATE '90s I wanted to change the informative but starchy and lackluster title, "Bibliography of–", to "The Grand Canon" and demote the otherwise informative "B" word to a subtitle. "Bibliography" is a word that is an effective repellant to those who might disdain pedagogic productions, so I sought an attention-grabber. The Grand Canon was for the play on words, too—canon (pronounced like "cannon") versus canon (pronounced "canyon"). The latter was for a long time a widely used typographical fallback that, with "Grand Canon" and other "canons," ignored the virgulilla of the original Spanish cañon. I saw the overall work as a canon. Since there was nothing else like it, I hoped that I could thus escape the uncomfortable brand of conceit. A canon affords that which is essential guidance, counsel, or support, one definitive or recognized for its authority. It's a shame that ecclesiastical communities have so elevated the word "canon" that it's now difficult to encounter or appreciate its etymological variant meanings beyond those of spiritual concerns. But I retrieve canon's other-worldly connotations, even if they are pedestrian compared to canons of scripture and clerics.

Starting in 2000 the bibliography was now going to be an online database rather than a monographic bibliography in print. This was something new and exciting—which I could update as frequently as was necessary—thanks to the foresight of the Grand Canyon Association (today the Grand Canyon Conservancy), which as its forerunner the Grand Canyon Natural History Association had published the two print editions of 1981 and 1990. I had envisioned a grand roll-out on a CD disk, but that idea exposed my technologically short vision. When the online database did arrive, it was aboard its own URL, grandcanyonbiblio.org, which ran with the Association's own grandcanyon.org. The Association linked to it from its website and announced it with spiffy, colorful postcards. The clear focus was the Grand Canyon. Even in my own mind, I confess, the "Lower Colorado River" remained kind of an afterthought to the Canyon, though that content of the bibliography rapidly succumbed to comparable concentration. I was nevertheless dissuaded from using what I thought was a more resounding title, "The Grand Canon," by a more sensible publications manager who was mindful that users might not be so etymologically in the know, so it remained (ho hum) the "Bibliography of–".

In time, I realized that the technology being used to drive the database was faltering, that the database probably was not going to survive. If it did fold, there would be nothing in its place except the very outdated print monographs—with all the additions and emendations to them vaporized. ColdFusion was the culprit, the software power behind the bibliography, which I had nothing to do with. I limped along with the problems for several years using a program developed for me years earlier to upload new sets of citations and batches of corrections or deletions, emailing for help whenever the operation crashed the database, which it did more and more frequently. The database was grand, but groaning. Conscious about what might seize up the site, I avoided some things, particularly the act of deleting multiple citations at once. The program, once capable of handling that, could not do it except impractically one deletion at a time with a time-consuming complete refresh after each. The fixed glitches in the software would recur on some future uploads, too. "Why" was was both beyond me and not my job to find out. I was finally stopped cold when staying in touch with a third-party technology person had become dodgy. After one too many crashes and near non-resurrections of the database, I drew the line.

The "Internet Edition" had had a fifteen year run—a damned good run at that, growing since 2000 by about 50,000 citations and probably even more edits. Then it was inert, usable but no longer updated, until 2021 when the plug was pulled. By that time, the Grand Canyon Conservancy's newer staff had not known of the bibliography that had been under their wing for 40 years, or for that matter that I was the person behind it. The 21st century and its brief moments of social media were in full swing; the boundlessly useful but intellectually starchy series of ample "Monographs" was something for "dusty" library shelves. (Little will raise the ire of a librarian or an archivist more than to call their collections "dusty"; it's a favorite, though ill-advised, term among journalists.) Times change. Onward, but don't forget!

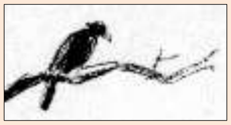
The demise of the database was a relief to me, actually. I knew that it was being used, but I also was keenly aware that the bibliography in my hands was now far larger, more correct, and as a whole more reliable than the constellation of data fields online. Fortunately, ten years earlier I had begun to restore the monographic presentation of the bibliography. This at last was THE GRAND CANON. While the online database still existed, I produced the first two editions (2012, 2015) as PDF-formatted, searchable book-like presentations on CD and DVD disks, for those who preferred to use a "whole" bibliography that looked like one and not rely simply on cursory "returns" from database queries that might or might not be structured sufficiently. Its only real problem was that the monograph was now really huge, but I could not see abandoning it in favor of a database that effectively made the whole invisible. To help avoid the hugeness problem, and to help individual users who might not be interested in "the whole" anyway, I planned to make the bibliography's 32 individual parts also separately available.

Late in 2018 I was about to retire from decades of museum-collections work and occupations in libraries and archives, so I prepared the Raven's Perch Media website with its tidy URL, https://ravensperch.org. It was to be the home of THE GRAND CANON but it soon grew into a source for other bibliographical and historical products that pertain to the Grand Canyon and the Lower Colorado River. In 2019, the third edition made its entrance as a PDF on the new website—the whole bibliography plus its 32 individual parts (and then some). In 2022, a fourth edition was posted online, now expanded to three volumes—Volume 2 was a separate Cartobibliography and Volume 3, Grand Canyon: Colossal Mirror, was created from what before had been a simple appendix devoted to other named "Grand Canyons" of the world and other worlds and a full complement of analogies, metaphors, euphemisms, and similes that use the term "Grand Canyon."

It was apparent to me that the main bibliography, despite being already divided into numerous topically arranged parts, should be further parsed into reference works to be useful to specific groups of people. For example, the biology and ecology citations, grouped in one part, could be used to produce discrete bibliographies on the many subdisciplines represented among them—ornithology, ichthyology, and botany for starters. I also devised separate historical bibliographies for Native Americans (arranged by tribe), administrative affairs (reorganized by agency and unit), and the historical Hoover Dam (alone), and still more compilations for people who are specially interested in topics that are too specific to reasonably segregate as main parts of THE GRAND CANON.

Raven's Perch also includes historical overviews, on research topics that had not been tapped before. My favored example, if I may promote it before other Raven's Perch products, is an account of the run up the Colorado River in 1858 by the expedition under Lt. Joseph C. Ives aboard a purpose-built little steamboat, Explorer. Whereas the trip and its events are widely known, this historical look was as seen from the perspective of the steamboat's engineer, Andrew J. Carroll. For 160 years all we knew was that he was "A. J. Carroll of Philadelphia," that he likely worked for the Philadelphia firm that built the iron and wood steamer—and that was it. Here he came more to light as witnessed in the published journals of two of the expedition's principal members, Lt. Ives and (in translation from the German) Balduin Möllhausen, because Carroll left no record of his own. I also chased the phantom engineer to his Irish and Philadelphia origins, found his given name, and trailed his journey West with the steamboat kit, where on the Colorado he earned the sobriquet "Captain Iron" from his expedition mates. He is now a person alive.

As for the raven, I am infatuated by these mischievous marvels of the bird realm. They may be "nuisances" to some people, but Native Americans find the bird's trickery and play useful for teaching cultural legacies and moral tales. I've watched them on river trips, sneaking into camp at dawn to shop around the sleeping owners of unsecured edible and attractive things, or swooping in to police the beach sands when the boats finally left camp. From a room at El Tovar Hotel I watched one arrive quietly to a chair back on the porch, scrutinize a salad plate-sized breakfast Danish, skid a few times while stretching one leg onto a glass table to lean way in to steal it, and fly off with it to a tree where he (or she) advertised the feat with pride.



The Raven's Perch logo itself comes from the aforementioned nineteenth century adventurer, naturalist, and artist Balduin Möllhausen. He painted an Ives expedition camp scene from 1858 near Grand Canyon that incorporated a watchful raven atop a dead tree. The view was transformed into a lithograph for publication in Lt. Ives' official report in 1861, published as a U.S. Congressional document, from which I cropped the perched raven. I wonder what Möllhausen would think of my purpose (much less the technology I used) to, raven-like, grab from his artwork. Danke, gnädiger Herr. Some years later, while working on a translation of Möllhausen's account of the expedition's venture between the Colorado River and the Grand Canyon—another Raven's Perch production—I was delighted to discover that he had written about that very scene. Möllhausen, himself perched in a nearby tree, recalled, "a couple of ravens croaked morosely on the bare branches of a dried-up fir tree as they waited impatiently for our departure, so that they could scout around the abandoned campsite for fat morsels."[11]

I know that the Raven's Perch website will disappear eventually—"nevermore" to Poe's ear—but its essential contents, designed as downloadable PDF books rather than as shape-shifting web pages, have a better chance of surviving, and, perhaps, they may even have been printed out (which I encourage). Elsewhere I've referred to such material as "light gray literature," the flotsam of items downloaded or printed out from websites that may no longer exist.[12] But frankly, despite my embrace of the technological world and faith that it will exist and grow in unimaginable leaps if civilization continues, I am unable to imagine what the content of today's digital world will be like even a century hence; or for that matter, how humans (and their technological assistants or overseers?) will interact with the things that we have today. If anything, that world must accommodate legacy and perpetuating paper libraries and digital resources alike; human history is just too rich and too long to forego the former. One might imagine that Leonardo da Vinci or Benjamin Franklin would approve of today's world were they to wake up in it. Would they—and we—feel the same in five centuries more? (If you are taken aback trying to comprehend the year "2525" consider that the view backward to 1525, being history rather than future, seems not to be so unimaginable.)

Bibliographies are, frankly, largely uninteresting to a readership who may not be comfortable with such clinical tools, and to publishers they are almost wholly uneconomical. One may complain that no one "reads" a bibliography. But in the preface to the 4th Edition of The Grand Canon I first presented my case that one can and should sometimes treat a bibliography as reading material. Bibliographies are not simply a look-up tool. They can be mined; they can inspire, and they can draw attention to what might not be so noticeable. They can re-present things from it in new formats and contexts for different users. But it takes a reader to make this happen.

I envision applications of what euphemistically is called Artificial Intelligence (AI), by which the raw data of a bibliography might be stretched, dissected, analyzed, and rejiggered to draw out new presentations and analyses that deliver data in modified ways, for different audiences, or perhaps even in ways not now imaginable (although AI's somewhat knotty debut reveals some untrustworthiness). But in this special case it all has to depend first on that raw source, the bibliography, which even can convey data through special typographies, not to overlook the mixed use of non-Latin orthographies and citations in multiple languages. It's not all text-only like in a database; typography and language deliver information, too. Then if there are annotations, these too have to be analyzed in context with the citation. I present these as challenges for AI. I hope people will try it out. More to the point, I hope that people will agree that bibliographies are more than lists and will use that concept to advantage, for uses and people not yet known.

SO THAT'S WHERE WE ARE, fifty years along, on the cusp of paper scholarship and digital analytics. The contrast of techniques and products within one adult's lifetime (mine) is astonishing. All that I had intended was a conventional bibliography, a fairly unremarkable where-to-go-to record of citations—author, date, title, source, period. My methods at first were basic, something someone from a century earlier would recognize. I even began blind-sided by the "traditional" scholarly form of citation to which I had been introduced by reading scientific journals, using only initials for authors' given names, and employing sometimes-mysteriously abbreviated serial titles. Readers might not appreciate H. Berg who in 1907 helpfully cited Österr. Z. f. B. u. H. He accepted that those in the know would understand that he referred to Österreichisch Zeitschrift für Berg- und Hüttenwesen (Austrian Journal of Mining and Metallurgy)! Abbreviated citations are the residue of vintage presumptuous scholarship and hand-typesetting short-cuts. There's no master list of "accepted" abbreviations for serial titles anyway, even though various disciplines have offered their own—differing—lists for authors to follow. By the time that my second edition came around I had gotten all that out of my system. I used people's given names wherever possible and spelled out all serial titles in full, to help users who might need the complete information.

I captured information on pieces of paper, standing at library shelves, sitting cross-legged on the floor in the aisles, or finding an empty table to spread out upon. Often I stood awkwardly in book stores, juggling a book or a magazine, scribbling a citation for something I did not or could not buy. Then (this being the twentieth century) I stood at xerox machines of all brands and abilities, copying thousands upon thousands of pages over the years; some of it for free (actually or surreptitiously), otherwise rolling coins into those machines that gobbled them up as cheaply as five or ten cents per page (I would get rolls of quarters from the bank—something else that dates me). I don't think I once destroyed a spine or shattered a brittle, acidic page (some library patrons are careful). Many of these citation-captures would eventually also append annotations and explanatory notes. That need grew in tandem with other work, as I also compiled eight annotated bibliographies and reference lists of Grand Canyon geology and paleontology that were published 1982–1992 by the Geological Society of America in the economical, less user-friendly medium of microfiche (all of which in a quarter century GSA would scan for commercial digital re-release as PDFs).

In those days software wasn't much of a consideration. It was pretty basic for word-processing and not yet very widely available; for non-numerical data it was not expected to be analytical by itself. In fact, the manuscript for the first published version of the bibliography was prepared before I ever owned a computer[13] (this was in 1981, a paperback with a solid black cover, not my choice, but it was dressed up by an artistically moody black-and-white photograph of Canyon weather). I rolled paper through a typewriter, with a carbon copy (maybe two, I don't recall) for assurance against loss or another use. It was to be the second in the Grand Canyon Natural History Association's "Monographs" series. A typesetter somewhere retyped the darned thing—what a tedious, probably boring job that must have been. Galleys (look it up) were made for proofing, which, mailed to me, I read yet again and marked up with a pen.

The second edition (1990) was an improvement—enter software. I owned a computer now and had access to a laser printer, so I created the pages myself (I used WordPerfect in those days), which were used as so-called "camera-ready copy" for offset printing. This time around I also included essays, some of them requested from authors in various fields to go along with the corresponding part of the bibliography. It even won second prize in a contest of publications from National Park Service cooperating associations; not bad for a bibliography! The volume was produced as a loose-leaf binder (color: "metallic mauve," not my choice but at least it too included an illustration). This theoretically allowed for updates such as its 1993 supplement (that promptly filled the binder, so that was that). The pages were also photo-imaged for microfiche (one of those things, supposedly more convenient than microfilm, that was going to change how researchers and librarians did things but who just tolerated it). In addition, the text-only keystrokes—devoid of informational niceties like italics and introducing goofs where characters with diacritical marks and other symbols were digitally misunderstood—were borrowed to distribute the bibliography on digital disks ("floppies," so-called then, the flexible 5¼-inch variety), another progressive idea that circled down the drain. In use the digital bytes were monotonized by monochrome CRT displays (look it up). I personally migrated a few of the disks on request, to the later non-flexible 3½-inch containerized disks (defiantly still called floppies), which was more drainware.

[13] Personal computers were only just then appearing on the market. Ironically, at that time I worked as an editor for a firm that published frequently updated computer-technology reports. For quite a while we wrote our reports on typewriters, and typesetters retyped it all for publication.

The database version of the bibliography began when I submitted my word-processed master file to the Grand Canyon Association in 1999—by mail, on a floppy. Someone was hired to finagle the format into data fields that became the database; and the user end of things was created by technology people for interaction on the web. Thereafter I uploaded corrections and updates through software that was readied for me, which as I said worked for a while but after fifteen years didn't work so well. (Ah, well!) I don't rely so heavily on others now, with a bit less technological sophistication and yet hopefully with some measure of approbation. At least THE GRAND CANON, all of it, is there for all.

THE GRAND CANON is a time capsule. Here is a lot of stuff that people have produced about the Grand Canyon, the Colorado River, and the lands all around it. So rely on the bibliography. Take the time. Read it, even. One might scoff that one may as well read a dictionary, but by looking through these pages, even if not on a hunt for anything specific, what catches your eye? Users might predictably jump to the names of the nobles and familiars of Grand Canyon and Colorado River history—but that's too easy; one knows them, knows what will be found, and would be surprised to not find them. Then again, maybe there will be a few newish details to go along with those works. Or, more telling, a citation nearby, like browsing a library or bookstore shelf, may alert one to something different but equally and productively interesting. Then there are people and publications that may be peculiar. Go and see. A database would return what is expected or hoped for; a reader recognizes the intriguing and discovers the unexpected.

THE GRAND CANON is a tour guide. It tells of things in the babble of 115 languages from Afghanistan to Zimbabwe: people, places, sounds, sights, smells, tastes, narratives, chronicles, memoirs, findings, reports, anecdotes, tales, fibs, statements, lessons, discoveries, debunkings, summaries, sermons, legends, poems, opinions, laws, rumors, announcements, pronouncements, speculations, assertions, dogmas, suggestions, novelties, resolutions, decrees, repetitions, petitions, pleas, beliefs and aliefs, truths and falsities (depending upon the writer or the reader); all presented in books, booklets, serials, pamphlets, maps, musical scores, transparencies (which include movies of the celluloid type), records (the kind for phonographs, but also the kind that are paper and photographic), and bytes (invisible, but they generate things that we humans can engage). Experiencing, sharing, and cultivating these citations is the reward of reading a bibliography. If one obtains the items, their thousands of points condensed therein will be disclosed. If you do embark on a reading, the perspective of the citations will with time very likely wondrously change when they are re-read as we, too, and the world around us, age.

Read! Explore! Often!

— EARLE SPAMER

pronounced sp*ah*-mer[14]

[14] Not only is this note a matter of family respect, but after my time the name is bound to be uncorrectably mispronounced. It retains the German back vowel "a" as in the English "sp*a*" or "f*a*ther"; it is not "spammer" nor "spaymer" although in England at least the latter is preferred by some Spamers there. Further, in this current age of digital "spam", a pejorative term, I have experienced a form of cultural censure when my email messages are robotically rejected due to a mistaken connotation with "spammers", sometimes misspelled "spamers" (though why a true spammer would advertise themself openly is beyond me). Twenty years ago, my personal plight even was mentioned by an information technology columnist (Reid Goldsborough, "Prevent Spam Filters From Blocking Legitimate e-mail," in "Personal Computing" syndicated column in electronic and print media, October 29, 2004). (An online-readable text of this article was found more recently, August 20, 2024: https://www.diverseeducation.com/home/article/15080306/prevent-spam-filters-from-blocking-legitimate-e-mail.)

A WORLDWIDE BIBLIOGRAPHY OF THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS IN THE UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

NOTE ABOUT THE COMPLEMENTARY VOLUME 1/PART A OF THE GRAND CANON

VOLUME 1/PART A of THE GRAND CANON (Introduction, Statistics, Surveys and Commentaries) has been segregated from the Bibliography (Volume 1/Part B) because the extended front matter and ancillary material meant for separate reading is too voluminous—much more than 600 pages now—to have it precede the bibliography. There will be some users of the bibliography who would see it as an encumbrance, material that is not often needed if one needs only to use the bibliography. This separate is new to the 5th Edition of THE GRAND CANON.

The Introduction helps establish a sense of order by outlining the craft of bibliography and the construction of bibliographies—this one in particular. Inasmuch as there is no one way to compile a bibliography, these pages also present explanations and justifications for the system I have used, so that my style can be compared to other bibliographies, my methods queried, and critiques made as needed as time goes by. Surely, aspects of THE GRAND CANON's methods will become antiquated. In fact, a few of its styles already approach "vintage" status for the reason that this bibliography is the result of more than five decades of work, having begun strictly with index cards and paper. The concept of "digital" resources was nothing like that which is recognized today.

All the information in Part A is included with an eye to the future. This research and reference material will outlive me. Since this has been an effectively personal project for more than 50 years, its products now used internationally thanks to the far reach and endurance of the internet, there is a lot to explain—history, methodology, and accumulated statistics. I have always been historically inclined, and I have worked with many different kinds of reasearchers from around the world. So I keep such people in mind. I think that my occupational history and publications testify to this. Thus the information and data in Part A will speak for me when I am can no longer do so for myself. That is the least I can do for users who will come after me.

I have also wanted to place bibliographies—not necessarily just this one—in perspective in the digital age. An essay in Part A defends the utility of bibliographies as the world and its users of data proceed farther into the digital age. I argue that specialized and truly comprehensive research perspectives can be gained, and administrative needs met, by using bibliographies that are, or claim to be, comprehensive. These are the works that have been assembled by thoughtful evaluation, essentially by hand; they are not shopped out from queries run in existing databases whose construction and content may not be fully suited to the work being done. There are, sadly, many examples of computer-generated reference lists from the third and fourth quarters of the 20th century; often they were unaesthetically reproduced in facsimile, having been generated by what were called line printers. And now we are faced with prospects far worse than unappealing presentations. Artificial Intelligence looms now, boding the creation of vast amounts of information that is neither wholly objective nor a guarantee of factual accuracy. It is—not yet—the realm of annotated or augmented bibliographies.

If Artificial Intelligence is deemed to be useful in this endeavor, I challenge its practitioners with a gold standard for success: AI will have to contextually retrieve or flag material that an individual user may not have discovered to be useful for a particular task at hand. It is, after all, the user who establishes that which is useful. The purpose of the bibliography is only to present information. What appears in Part A, then, are guidelines and guardrails for the craft of bibliography as well as a procedural record of how this bibliography in particular was created.

These figures include a thousand or two more items that are repeated between two or more parts due to the overlapping subject of those publications. The actual number of overlapping, replicated citations has not been established.

* This number counts "general" maps only, which formerly comprised Part 25 of THE GRAND CANON. All cartographic products are now incorporated into Volume 2 of THE GRAND CANON (Cartobibliography), which contains 4,673 items (see statistics with Part 25 herein). General maps continue to be assigned the Item number prefix "25." and continue to be counted separately for statistical purposes such as this. Specialized cartographical products (those that are not "general" maps) continue to be cited in the parts of THE GRAND CANON to which they thematically belong (as also explained in the notes to Part 25) even though they also appear in the unified Cartobibliography.

1870 2.1410 New tracks in North America: A journal of travel and adventure whilst engaged in a survey for a southern railroad to the Pacific Ocean during 1867-8 [ABSTRACT]. Mittheilungen aus Justus Perthes' Geographischer Anstalt über Wichtige Neue Erforschungen auf dem Gesammtgebeite der Geographie von Dr. A. Petermann [Petermanns Geographische Mitteilungen], 16: 349-350. [In German.]

Each citation in the bibliography has a unique, but arbitrary, serial number referred to herein as an ITEM NUMBER—in the example above the number is 2.26799. It is composed of the number of the part of the bibliography in which it is cited (Part "2." in the example), suffixed with a unique number within that part ("26799" in the example). These are explained more fully in THE GRAND CANON Volume 1/Part A.

An ITEM NUMBER is assigned when a citation is added to the bibliography, or when a citation is transferred from one part to another, thus the numbers do not follow in order within the alphabetical order of the bibliography's citations. They are not reused if a citation is removed from a part, either by deletion or transfer to another part (and there renumbered). ITEM NUMBERS did not appear in the 1981 and 1990/1993 print editions of the bibliography.

Many citations throughout the bibliography have appended to them CROSS-LISTINGS to previous editions of this bibliography and to selected bibliographical references. Also cross-listed are citations for REVIEWS AND NOTICES of the works cited. These ancillary notes are indented and prefixed by the equivalence symbol (≡) so as to readily distinguish them from the citations themselves. For users who view this bibliography in its original PDF format, the bibliographical cross-listings are in dark orange and the reviews cross-listings are in dark blue (see example above); the colors are only for visual convenience.

Regarding the previous editions of this bibliography, see in the section, Preceding and Continuing Editions.

CROSS-LISTINGS to reviews and notices cite book reviews and similar publication notices for publications cited throughout the bibliography. This is indicated by the accompanying ITEM NUMBERS in the cross-listing—most are in Part 30 (REVIEWS AND SIMILAR NOTICES); some others in Part 3 (THE NEW YORK TIMES) and a few elsewhere.

Citations for works that are not in English note the language in red print, usually at the end of the citation.

* Citations to WHEAT pertain more fully to, and are explained in, THE GRAND CANON Volume 2 (Cartobibliography), where details and chorographical notes for the map will be found.

The bibliography lists 45221

items produced between 1540 and the present. It includes books, periodicals, serials, maps, audio-visual works, and electronic media in 34 subject areas. Coverage includes the Grand Canyon of Arizona and the lower Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and the Colorado River delta in Mexico. Greatly expanded and revised from earlier editions published by Grand Canyon Natural History Association.

[1] Searches include the start and end year. To search for citations from the year 1990 only, enter "1990" to "1990". Check "No Date" or "Unknown" for citations which have no stated date or for which date information is absent. To search only "No Date" or "Unknown" citations, check the appropriate boxes and leave the "from" year blank.

[2] Keyword searches may use all lower-case letters. But the use of capital letters will search only for those capital letters. Words entered as a phrase will be searched as a phrase. Do not use quotation marks (unless the item being searched for also contains quotation marks). To find entries containing discretely different words, use "and", "or", and "not" between the words. If you cannot type in diacritical marks like "ñ" or "í", use wildcards. For examples of usage click here.

Contents and Arrangement of the Internet Edition 2000–2021

The following table of contents for the Internet Edition of the bibliography was copied from the online web page in 2011. It is largely unchanged from its first presentation in January 2000 and was designed by a former website provider for the Grand Canyon Association.

Compare this presentation to that for THE GRAND CANON (see Detailed Contents Page, Bibliography pages 4–7) to ascertain further changes that have been made to part titles and descriptions; including the removal of Parts 33 and 34, about which:

Part 33—"Other" Grand Canyons is no longer updated and is not included in THE GRAND CANON. That part, which tracked uses of "Grand Canyon" in other geographical locales, was removed as a matter of pragmatic bibliography, not truly pertaining to the Grand Canyon except through nomenclature and comparison, analogy, and metaphor. These separate lists, now greatly expanded, are now online as THE GRAND CANON Volume 3 (https://ravensperch.org).

Part 34—Miscellaneous Manuscripts was removed from this version of the bibliography in November 2003; it was also removed from the Internet Edition online. Originally, I had believed it was prudent to include manuscript materials that were cited by other sources, in order to include those records in the bibliography. However, this is not the purpose of the bibliography; tracking manuscript and other primary source materials is an entirely separate project, one for someone else to pursue. Only very selected manuscript materials are cited now, with explanation.

The Internet Edition was conceived as a searchable database, superseding the print editions of the bibliography and first posted to the Grand Canyon Association website in January 2000 with its own domain name, www.grandcanyonbiblio.org; and to that edition emendations and additions online were made frequently until mid-2015. It was removed in October 2021.

BIBLIOGRAPHIES AND INDICES

1. BIBLIOGRAPHIES

Bibliographies and indices that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River region

Every bibliography and reference list has its good and bad points; each is designed to serve a different purpose and audience. The citations given here are those which relate directly to the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River, or which include sufficient references on the region to make them a valuable supplementary or alternate contemporary resource to the present bibliography. Other bibliographies also extend their coverage beyond the limits of the present bibliography.

GENERAL AND SPECIAL INTEREST SUBJECTS

2. GENERAL

General, historical, and "popular" works, including regional geography, non-fictional literature, and biographical material relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This part includes all literature that broadly addresses the Grand Canyon-lower Colorado River region as well as specifically focused literature. It includes material written for a popular audience as well as scholarly publications that deal at least in part with the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River. Material that may otherwise be classified as "Miscellaneous" is also in this part of the bibliography. Travel literature that is more travelogue in presentation is included in this part, but travel publications that are incremental guides to attractions and informational guides to accommodations and services will be found in 9. Travel.

3. NEW YORK TIMES

Grand Canyon articles and reports in The New York Times from 1857

The New York Times is widely available on microfilm. Its comprehensive and authoritative editorial view of national affairs, as well as its traditionally well-respected reporting, make it a useful resource on national perspectives of events and issues in the Southwest. The longevity of this newspaper also allows it to serve as a Grand Canyon-Colorado River bibliography back to the time of the first expeditions to the canyon by Joseph C. Ives (1857-1858) and John Wesley Powell (1869).

For book reviews, see 30. Reviews.

4. MEMORIALS

Biographical memorials, necrologies, and obituary notices that refer to people of the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River

To browse the memorials by name of the decedent instead of the author, see the separate file, Memorials (By Name of Decedent) [NOTE: This is a text file, not updated since January 2000.]

This part lists only obituary notices and commemorative or retrospective memorials. Such sketches are cited here only if the citationist refers to the Grand Canyon or the Colorado River. A few pertinent miscellaneous biographical sketches of persons prominent in the history of the area are also included. Traditional biographies as books and articles are listed in 2. General. The name of the decedent is added to the end of the citation, with his or her dates where known.

5. VISION-IMPAIRED

Works produced especially for vision-impaired people

This part includes items specifically prepared for the visually impaired. These citations are from the Library of Congress Information System; some publications are available only to those meeting holding-agency eligibility criteria. Dates given are for the printed volume from which the special product was prepared, unless listed otherwise.

See 27. Audio Only for conventional audio recordings.

6. YOUTH

Non-fiction and fiction for younger audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part includes all those works traditionally referred to as “juvenile”; it includes works that also can be categorized as appropriate for the “young adult”. Both non-fiction and fiction are grouped together in order to provide complete, contiguous coverage in this special literary genre. If the context of the title does not clearly indicate whether the item is fiction or non-fiction, a notation is appended to explain it.

See 26. Audio-Visual for “juvenile”-category films.

7. FICTION

Fiction for adult audiences that includes the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part lists only works of fiction, including folklore. However, special-interest subjects that can be considered by many to be works of fiction—such as those relating to UFOs and Creationist topics—are considered to belong either to "general" subjects or to the specific subject to which it purports to belong (e.g. Geology).

See 6. Youth for "juvenile" and "young adult" fiction.

8. VERSE

Poetry and verse about the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

Publications that are both prose and verse are listed here as well as in Part 2. General.

9. TRAVEL

Informational guides to attractions and accommodations of hiking, camping, and land-, water-, and air-travel in the Grand Canyon region and the vicinity of the lower Colorado River (excluding Colorado River guides)

This part includes only those publications that provide route-finding information, seasonal data on accommodations, and time-limited information such as fees—specifically for lodging, restaurants, commercial recreational and educational opportunities, and scenic attractions.

See 2. General for essay-type guides that largely omit information on locations, fees, hours of operation, and other such time-limited information.

See 10. Colorado River Guides for travel guides to the Colorado River.

10. COLORADO RIVER GUIDES

Informational guides to travel on the Colorado River between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and Mexico (excluding geological guides)

This part includes "strip maps" and other such specific guides for travelers.

LOWER COLORADO RIVER CORRIDOR SPECIAL INTEREST SUBJECTS

11. LOWER COLORADO—NATURAL HISTORY

Natural history and geography specifically about the lower Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico

This part includes only those natural history and geography references that are restricted to the lower Colorado River corridor from Lake Mead to the delta. It includes hydrologic investigations of the river itself, as limited to this reach, including studies of that part of Lake Mead which has inundated the lower Grand Canyon. This part also lists natural history studies related to the Salton Sea.

See 2. General for general and historical works pertaining to the lower Colorado River.
See 13. Administration for water-supply issues directly affecting Grand Canyon National Park.
See 21. Geology for surface-water supply documents pertaining to the Colorado River basin.

12. LOWER COLORADO—PROJECTS

Engineering projects and water management issues in the Colorado River corridor below Grand Canyon — Lake Mead, Arizona–Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico — and proposed projects in the Grand Canyon

This part includes all references that deal with the dams and support facilities in the lower Colorado River, from Hoover Dam to the delta. Also included are documents related to irrigation and flood-control measures in the lower Colorado River; among them are project-specific documents and articles about the Colorado River breakout and the inundation of the Salton sink. As a means to accommodate the literature on proposed dams and diversion structures inside the Grand Canyon, documents relating to them are included in this part.

GRAND CANYON REGION HUMAN AFFAIRS SUBJECTS

13. ADMINISTRATION

Administration of Grand Canyon National Park and adjacent federal lands (including that part of Glen Canyon National Recreation Area between Glen Canyon Dam and Lees Ferry, Arizona)

This part comprises items broadly relating to the administration of the national park and earlier administratively sectioned lands. But it lists more than documents pertaining to bureaucratic procedures and regulations. Also included here are references that pertain to land use practices affecting the politically defined unit; some items relating to historic structures; management documents derived from environmental studies on public lands; public comments on, and responses to, proposed and implemented studies and management decisions; and general articles and published opinions that relate to legislative issues affecting the protection, operation, and public use of the lands of the political unit.

For less similarly related items, see also:
14. Human Affairs for sociological, recreational, and economic analyses of visitation profiles, visitor experiences, and social concerns of authorized concessions in the national park, and for similar analyses of the impact of legislatively mandated operational changes to the economic and power supply mandates of Glen Canyon Dam
15. Health and Safety for issues relating to human health and safety, including those that discuss and contribute to administrative decisions on management issues
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for ecological studies that discuss and contribute to administrative decisions on management issues
19. Environment—Biological for ecological studies relating to management of living organisms
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for physical and geological studies of environment that discuss or contribute to administrative decisions on management issues

14. HUMAN AFFAIRS

Sociological, recreational, educational, and economic issues, commentaries, and analyses relating to the Grand Canyon region

This part lists analytical studies and reports that relate to socio-economic concerns, including visitor appreciation and social “quality of wilderness” studies, and items pertaining to teaching and instruction about the Grand Canyon and Colorado River.

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for public-lands overview and management decision documents that relate to recreation and aesthetics

18. Environment—Physical Ecology for quantitative studies of environmental quality
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

15. HEALTH AND SAFETY

Issues relating to human health and safety in the Grand Canyon or on the Colorado River through Grand Canyon

This part lists items relating to human health and safety in the national park and immediate vicinity. It also includes documents on accident investigations.

For related items, see also:

3. New York Times for pertinent accounts published in New York Times (e.g., aircraft accidents)
13. Administration for aspects of safety issues that have resulted in discussion or management decisions relating to federally administrated areas
17. Native Americans for material relating to Native American tribes and their relationship with the Grand Canyon after European contact
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for aspects of environmental monitoring of the physical environment
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

16. ARCHAEOLOGY

Archaeological history and research in the Grand Canyon region, including historical archaeology of nineteenth- and twentieth-century activities

This part includes items that relate to archaeological surveys of cultural artifacts and physical remains, from early human inhabitation of the Grand Canyon region to the remnants of recent historical (nineteenth- and twentieth-century) activities.

Also see 20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

17. NATIVE AMERICANS

Native Americans of the Grand Canyon and issues relating to Native American activities in the canyon and in the national park

This part includes all documents that pertain to the Havasupai, who live within the physiographic Grand Canyon. Other Native American tribes are included in this part only with respect to their activities in the Grand Canyon, or with respect to their traditional or claimed heritage of the Grand Canyon.

See also:

2. General for publications of broader interest that relate at least in part to Native Americans and the Grand Canyon, including general travel items
16. Archaeology for publications relating to Native Americans prior to European contact, or to archaeological documentation of Native American heritage claims to the Grand Canyon
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
26. Audio-Visual for films and videos that relate at least in part to Native Americans and the Grand Canyon

GRAND CANYON REGION SCIENTIFIC SUBJECTS

18. ENVIRONMENT—PHYSICAL ECOLOGY

Physical, chemical, biophysical, and biochemical aspects of land, water, and atmospheric ecology, and historical aspects of environmental research, relating to the Grand Canyon region and the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon

This part includes studies of biological ecology that are not organismically specific, and environmental studies that have been part of scientific investigations conducted for the purpose of management of public lands in the Grand Canyon region. This part also includes general articles that pertain to environmental issues in the Grand Canyon region.

For items pertaining to natural history in the lower Colorado River corridor, below Lake Mead, see 11. Lower Colorado River—Natural History and 12. Lower Colorado River—Projects.

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for items on policy input, management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies, and public comments on these documents
14. Human Affairs for economic and sociological impacts of dam operations and river flows
15. Health and Safety for human health issues of environment in Grand Canyon and on the Colorado River
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents
21. Geology for physical and geological environmental impacts
22. Hydrogeology for environmental impacts to the hydrogeological regime of the Colorado River

19. ENVIRONMENT—BIOLOGY

Organismal biology and biological investigations in the Grand Canyon region and the Colorado River corridor through the Grand Canyon

This part includes documents on biological censuses and the biology of animal, plant, and protist organisms as occurring in the Grand Canyon region. This part also includes biological reports and studies that have been part of scientific investigations conducted for the purpose of environmental management of public lands in the Grand Canyon region.

For items pertaining to natural history in the lower Colorado River corridor below Lake Mead, see:

11. Lower Colorado River—Natural History
12. Lower Colorado River—Projects

For related items, see also:

13. Administration for items on policy input and management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies and public comments on these documents
14. Human Affairs for economic and sociological impacts of dam operations and river flows
15. Health and Safety for human health issues of environment in Grand Canyon and on the Colorado River
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

21. Geology for physical and geological environmental impacts
22. Hydrogeology for environmental impacts to the hydrogeological regime of the Colorado River

20. GCES

Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents produced under the monitoring and research programs of the Glen Canyon Dam Environmental Impact Statement as mandated by Congress
(compiled by Richard D. Quartaroli)

Browse file only. Due to the unconventional format of these informational citations, they are not part of the searchable database. [NOTE: This is a text file, not updated since January 2000. The citations, however, have since been modified and included in the online database.]

The Glen Canyon Environmental Studies (GCES) were created to perform as an interagency body under the direction of the U.S. Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation. This was in response to a congressional mandate to develop an Environmental Impact Statement on the effects of hydropower production at Glen Canyon Dam on the Colorado River and on the river's riparian community downstream through lower Glen Canyon and the Grand Canyon. The EIS also examined the potential impacts of management decisions on social and economic issues. The GCES went through two phases, and the EIS was completed in 1995. Also see 13. Administration for various management issues and decisions related to the GCES.

The GCES was such an important part of the scientific and cultural study of the Grand Canyon, specifically in the previously little-studied Colorado River corridor, that the products of these studies are a bibliography in their own right. Many of the documents are interdisciplinary, thus also a justification for listing them separately, rather than in several places throughout this bibliography. Historians of science will also notice in this list that some of the subjects were reported in other scientific publications. A few of the reports were also released in their entirety as U.S. Geological Survey Open-File Reports or publications of the National Academy Press; these are itemized here. Most of the reports listed here, and voluminous supporting data, are archived at the Grand Canyon Monitoring and Research Center, Flagstaff, Arizona. Complete information for this list is still being compiled.

Enumerated entries following the sequence for this bibliography do not necessarily pertain to individual reports; some refer to study groups, various reports of which are archived.

21. GEOLOGY

Physical and historical geology of the Grand Canyon region (including groundwater hydrogeology but excluding hydrogeology of the Colorado River and other surface waters)

This part includes works about the geology and paleontology of the Grand Canyon (excluding the hydrogeologic regime of the Colorado River), stratigraphic studies of Grand Canyon's rock units beyond the canyon proper, studies of the structure and tectonics of southwestern North America where embracing the Grand Canyon region, historical investigations of the Cenozoic evolution of the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River, and modern groundwater studies of the region.

Also see:

11. Lower Colorado—Natural History for geological works about the lower Colorado River region, Lake Mead, Arizona-Nevada, to the Colorado River delta in Mexico
20. GCES for a consolidated listing of Glen Canyon Environmental Studies technical reports and related documents

22. Hydrogeology for materials relating to the hydrogeologic regime of the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon
29. Computer Media for specialized products released for use in this environment

22. HYDROGEOLOGY

Hydrogeology of the Colorado River and tributary surface waters in the Grand Canyon — including hydraulic investigations of the river, sedimentary studies in the river corridor, surface-water resources, and hydrogeological investigations relating to proposed engineering projects in the river corridor between Glen Canyon Dam and Lake Mead

This part encompasses all physical studies of the water flow (hydrology) of the Colorado River, applied research on its carried sediment, and the effects of the river's flow on the distribution of sediment on the banks of the river.

Also see:
13. Administration for items on policy input and management documents drafted as the result of environmental studies of the Colorado River
18. Environment—Physical Ecology for items relating to physical ecology as affected by the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon

21. Geology for items relating to groundwater hydrology and climatic studies with hydrological applications

23. GEOLOGICAL GUIDES

Geological field guides and road logs for the Grand Canyon and vicinity, and the Colorado River corridor between Glen Canyon Dam, Arizona, and Mexico

This part includes all publications that are intended to serve as geological field guides to routes and specific localities in the Grand Canyon and vicinity. Included among them are all geological guides to the Colorado River through the Grand Canyon.

See 10. Colorado River Guides for base maps and general guides to the Colorado River.

24. GEOLOGIC MAPS

Separately published geologic and special topographic maps of the Grand Canyon region

This list includes only separately published maps, and atlas sheets. For a more comprehensive index to all published geologic maps to 1992 that includes those that were published as figures within publications, see in:

Spamer, Earle E. 1990. Geology of the Grand Canyon: A guide and index to published graphic and tabular data (excluding paleontology). Geological Society of America, Microform Publications 21, 674 pp. [See pp. 124-213.)

25. GENERAL MAPS

Separately published maps, charts, and atlas sheets that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River region (excluding geologic and special topographic maps)

There are hundreds of maps that could be listed here, but only those which have come to my attention are included. The catalogues of map dealers include many maps that cover the Southwest; unfortunately, their citations are incomplete and often the illustrations are too small to read pertinent author and publisher data from the map.

Also see entries listed in Official map publications; a historical sketch, and a bibliographical handbook of current maps and mapping services in the United States, Canada, Latin America, France, Great Britain, Germany, and certain other countries, by Walter Thiele, under the direction of A. F. Kuhlman (American Library Association, Chicago, 1938, 356 pp.); and Vegetation maps of North America, compiled by A. W. Küchler and Jack McCormick (International Bibliography of Vegetation Maps, A. W. Küchler, ed., Volume 1, Anton W. Van Bekhoven, Naarden, 453 pp.).

For Colorado River guides (strip maps), see 10. Colorado River Guides.

26. AUDIO-VISUAL

Audio-visual works — photographic sets, motion pictures, videotapes, and compact disks (CDs) relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

For certain tape speeds, ips = inches per second. Names of producing agencies are used for the indexed field. Playing times are given in minutes: seconds.

See also 5. Vision-Impaired for recordings produced specifically for the visually impaired.
See also 29. Computer Media for products designed for use on computers.

27. AUDIO ONLY

Audio works — audio tapes, analog recordings, and audio-only compact disks (CDs) relating to the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River, and orchestral and other musical scores

“Record” is an analog sound recording, or “phonodisc”; 78 rpm (revolutions per minute) format is on 10-inch plastic disks, 45 rpm format is on 7-inch plastic disks, and 33 1/3 rpm format is on 12-inch plastic disks. For tape speeds, ips = inches per second. Except for certain items especially identified to the artist or to the composer of musical works, names of producing agencies are used in the author field. Playing times are given in minutes: seconds.

See also 5. Vision-Impaired for recordings produced specifically for the visually impaired.
See also 27. Audio-Visual for audio-visual materials incorporating Grofé’s “Grand Canyon Suite” in its entirety or in selected excerpts.
See also 29. Computer Media for products designed for use on computers.

28. MISCELLANEOUS IMAGERY

Miscellaneous artworks and photographs that are not illustrative material in works of general, historical, literary, or biographical interest, but appear by themselves with or without legend

This part includes only single, extraneous items; for example, a reproduction of a single painting, or folios containing prints only, without accompanying text other than the legend.

See 2. General for more complete and critical material on art and photography of the Grand Canyon-Colorado River region.

29. COMPUTER MEDIA

Computer media that include the Grand Canyon or the lower Colorado River

This part includes items that were released only in a computer-readable format, or in both hardcopy format accompanied by computer-readable versions or additional data in computerized format.

See 26. Audio-Visual and 27. Audio Only for audio-visual and audio-only CDs.

OTHER GUIDES

30. REVIEWS

Critical and brief reviews of books, articles, films, and products about the Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River

To browse the reviews by the title of the work being reviewed instead of the review's author, see the separate file, Reviews (By Title). [NOTE: This is a text file, not updated since January 2000.]

This part includes critical reviews at length in scholarly publications, as well as favorable promotional reviews in general-interest publications. Product reviews include software.

31. NEWSPAPER GUIDE

Brief guide to newspaper titles of the Grand Canyon region (and a supplemental list for Yuma, Arizona)

Browse file only. Due to the unconventional format of these informational citations, they are not part of the searchable database.

Newspapers are a valuable resource to the historian. Long-running papers of any town or city are important historical documents, but researchers who bask in the thrill of finding the obscure and unusual anecdote, small-town and out-of-print newspapers are a mine of information.

This list of newspapers is not exhaustive, nor is there any guarantee that all of them have had coverage of events or people of the immediate Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River regions. But within these regions it is likely that newspapers published there have had a higher frequency of canyon- and river-related items than the newspapers of more distant places. This list provides a sampling of newspapers of northern Arizona, southern Nevada, and southern Utah. A special supplement to the Arizona list includes newspapers of that crossroads of the far Southwest, Yuma.

32. MARGINALIA

Items not about the Grand Canyon but having a Grand Canyon venue or otherwise borrowing the name "Grand Canyon"

This part contains citations which are themselves not about the Grand Canyon but refer to the Grand Canyon as a venue; for example, meetings and conferences about subjects other than the canyon held at Grand Canyon. While they do not specifically contain information about the canyon, that they took place there makes them peripherally a part of the history of the canyon.

See 33. "Other" Grand Canyons for items relating to other geographical features that use the appellation "Grand Canyon".

Contents and Arrangement of the Internet Edition 2000–2021

[NOTE: Parts 33 and 34 have been removed from THE GRAND CANON. Part 34 has been completely removed from the Internet Edition. Part 33 remains temporarily in that online database due to the constraints of making deletions online. —E.E.S.]

33. "OTHER" GRAND CANYONS

Works that refer to other geographic features of the world and elsewhere that use the appellation "Grand Canyon" or make comparisons to the Grand Canyon, and works in which there are metaphorical references to the Grand Canyon

This part lists citations that pertain to other geographic features that include "Grand Canyon" as part of their names; for example, "Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone" or "The Little Grand Canyon". This part also contains: citations of articles that in some way compare the magnitude of other geographic features—on Earth and elsewhere—with the Grand Canyon; cite the Grand Canyon as the superlative chasm of the world; as well as more abstract comparisons, such as "the equatorial Grand Canyon", a concept of global economics. Exception is made here to this bibliography's exclusion of newspaper items; and further, to document the appearance of such items, this part includes such ephemera as advertising flyers, postcards, and some items that we have seen on the Internet, with the realization that the last category is especially ephemeral. For the Internet citations, the date is given for when seen by the compiler. Annotations provide quotations or the context in which the reference to the Grand Canyon appears. This documents all such references and comparisons to the Grand Canyon as have come to the attention of the compiler and contributors. For a published listing, now incomplete, of other known geographic features named "Grand Canyon" and "Colorado River", refer to the article by Corax and Abyssus (1996). The Geographic Names Information System managed by the U.S. Geological Survey is also a useful Internet resource at http://www-nmd.usgs.gov/www/gnis/index.html. The Defense Mapping Agency provides a similar resource for geographic names outside of the United States at http://164.214.2.53/gns/html/index.html.

34. MISCELLANEOUS MANUSCRIPTS

Manuscript materials originally cited in the bibliography or intended for inclusion in the Internet edition; subsequently removed but retained in this part for archival purposes

[Earlier editions of this bibliography included some manuscript resources that should not have been cited. It is beyond the purview of this bibliography to list manuscripts and unique copies of reports. When such were originally added, it was believed that they were of sufficiently unique or special interest to warrant listing them; usually, a notation was appended to indicate the reference from which the citation was obtained; this was intended to be a means by which interested readers could refer back to the original citation to establish the context of the citation. These manuscript materials have been deleted from the formal parts of the bibliography, but they are retained in this part so as not to lose useful (even if not comprehensive) information that had been in previous editions. Citations which lack a cross-reference to Monograph 8 are items that were compiled for inclusion in the present edition. In one instance, a copy of an unpublished report appeared in a bookseller's annotated catalogue. For each citation, the part of this Internet edition of the bibliography for which it had been intended is indicated.

PART 2. GENERAL PUBLICATIONS

HISTORICAL, GEOGRAPHICAL, SOCIAL, CULTURAL, BIOGRAPHICAL, POPULAR, AND COMMONPLACE WORKS CONCERNING THE GRAND CANYON AND LOWER COLORADO RIVER REGIONS

OVERVIEW. This part includes publications that focus on the Grand Canyon and/or the lower Colorado River region, and writings that address larger areas but embrace these regions. It comprises material written for a popular audience as well as scholarly publications, everything that is, broadly speaking, about the humanities—except items that pertain more specifically to other parts of the bibliography. Publications that casually or cursorily note, in general ways, the Grand Canyon or lower Colorado River areas, or parts of them, are included. Travel literature that is more travelogue or memoir in presentation (rather than specific guides to attractions and facilities) are in this part. Fiction as such is not included, but literary criticism on pertinent works of fiction are added. Material that may otherwise be arbitrarily classified as "Miscellaneous" (and not pertinent to other parts of the bibliography) is also in this part.

RELATED MATERIAL

PART 3. THE NEW YORK TIMES for additional items that relate to this part of the bibliography

Part 2 includes citations of items that contain potentially offensive material, with sexual or other matter that some users, for religious, moral, or personal reasons, may not wish to encounter. The pertinent citations are grouped in the Supplement at the end of Part 2. It is additionally important to segregate these citations as this is an internationally focused bibliography with an international audience, whose particular perspectives may not be known to this compiler. The cited items themselves may contain explicit material but a few of them do not; yet these, too, are segregated because the serials in which they appear do contain such matter. (Off-color language is not considered reason for segregation.)

ART OF THE GRAND CANYON

Art of the Grand Canyon: An Introduction and Annotated Bibliography. (2023)

The Introduction is a very brief, admitedly arbitrary, primer of Grand Canyon art for readers who may not be very familiar with the subject, highlighting some usual and some appealingly unusual aspects about well-known and obscure artists alike, and a few of their pieces. It also finds some new perspectives and makes a few comparisons that might be thought-provoking, perhaps unrealized. The annotated bibliography gathers citations for publications, beginning in 1853, that in some way mention or illustrate the work of Grand Canyon artists between 1851 and 2023. It serves as a documentary effort that confirms the breadth and depth of artistic interest in the Grand Canyon. It also introduces numerous artists who have not had the privilege of being "recognized" in the world of art, such as those whose work was contributed "on the fly" to various journals and magazines, who are not acclaimed artists in their own right.

NOTES FOR PART 2

THIS is by far the largest part of this work; 28 percent of the bibliography. It includes everything that is, broadly speaking, the humanities, except items that pertain more specifically to other parts of the bibliography. It embraces popular, academic, and certain organizational and governmental productions; and it includes everything from commonplace items and notes on the fly, to lengthy monographs, stout coffee-table books, and selections from multi-volume encyclopedias and other productions.

A great many publications include both the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River. It is unrealistic to separately cite the works that focus on Grand Canyon versus those that focus on the lower Colorado River; many works embrace both areas. To compile different lists for the two areas would repeat a very large number of citations in both lists. Since this is a bibliography about the Grand Canyon and the lower Colorado River regions, it is just as unreasonable to remove from the General Publications part of the bibliography those works that are exclusively about the lower Colorado River (those with no substantive mention of the Grand Canyon). But to help distinguish items that are solely about the lower Colorado River region, Item numbers in colored italics within Part 2 (for example, 2.11822) denote these geographically limited items.[16] Item numbers that are not italicized in Part 2 pertain to the Grand Canyon region or to both the Grand Canyon and lower Colorado River regions.

As a rule of thumb, publications listed herein that predate the 1858 first explorations (by non-Native people) of the Grand Canyon, will by default embrace only the lower Colorado River region. However, some earlier works, even some from the 16th to 19th centuries, are considered by this compiler to include the Grand Canyon–lower Colorado River geographic set even though most of the lands were territories unknown. This is due either to these publications' continental focus or because they are, topically, entradas into the great (even if unknown) region that includes the Grand Canyon country. Some—for example, publications about the Sitgreaves expedition of 1851—will have entered the greater Grand Canyon region south of the canyon enroute to the lower Colorado River and thus are counted among those titles. Where notations in the citations indicate "see pp." without any indication of geographic area, one may assume that it pertains to the Grand Canyon region; these are legacy citations from early versions of this bibliography. Likewise, citations that have no "see" notation also should be considered to include in some measure the Grand Canyon region.

Part 2 further includes most publications that, in previous bibliographies, had been heaped into a "Miscellaneous" part that was an arbitrary and unhelpful category, inasmuch as such items are as "commonplace" as they are "miscellaneous".

Part 2 as well accommodates things that relate to, but are not categorized with, material in other parts of the bibliography. For example, it includes publications that pertain to modern social issues of the regions that otherwise are accommodated for their respective parts of the bibliography—such as Part 11, which embraces scientific and technical issues of the lower Colorado River region, but for which issues relating to modern social conditions would be out of place in Part 11 (such as the social concerns that pertain labor issues in the Imperial Valley).

Material that appears in periodically published regional tourists' guides is selected. Often the texts are repeated from one season, and from one year, to the next; repeating them in the bibliography, especially in significant numbers, is not necessarily helpful. Moreover, it is rather difficult to locate complete sets of such productions. Thus, what appears in this bibliography should be considered a representative sample. If an item stands out from others that are usually repeated, or if their eye-catching titles differ greatly between installments, they will be cited as examples of editorial style and the editors' intention to refocus the article's interest for the visitor. More specifically, from the Grand Canyon Tusayan Guide (and variant titles) and the affiliated Williams guide that also includes Grand Canyon and Tusayan, both published by the Williams-Grand Canyon News, all general items are included in Part 2, rather than mixing them between this part and Part 9 (travel guides). This was done because the contexts and content of individual items are so closely interrelated that they could be listed in either part, or both, probably to even greater distraction to those who are browsing this bibliography. I feel that it is more beneficial to keep these frequently addressed, selected, items together.

There are so many works that are multidisciplinary, which are not convenient to cite under one subject, that they must be cited within several pertinent parts of the bibliography; their numbers are, however, relatively few. Were this bibliography rearranged into a database format, artificial subdivisions could be employed to allow for more precise (though contrived) subject sorting; but as I have explained elsewhere herein, THE GRAND CANON is purposely in monographic format, from which a database may be devised.

1794 2.29108 天經或問註解 [tenkyo wakumon chukai] [Heavenly commentary or Illustrated astronomy]. [Osaka, Japan: Sharin publishing house.] [See woodcut map, north polar projection with North and Central America.] [The title as given by Wheat (1957, Volume I, p. 242, including square brackets) is "Tenkyo Wakumon Chukai [North and Central America]", which is the title of the book, to which is added a description of the geographic coverage of the map at least as illustrated by Wheat. The information on publisher and date cited here are as given by Wheat; book title in Japanese is added here (see also the Bibliographical Note below). Wheat remarks that the map is ". . . included in a revised edition, in Japanese, of a rare Chinese volume by Yu I, a Chinese astronomer." Wheat further remarks (p. 153, his emphasis) that the map "is unique in that on it a vastly magnified peninsula of California is attached to the mainland at its southern, rather than its northern extremity." The map as illustrated by Wheat (facing p. 153) is half of a polar projection, with a caption (approximately rendered here as "地球改正面裏北"). The peninsula is labeled (inverting the map and reading south to north), "カリォルニア", which approximates the modern Japanese spelling of California (カリフォルニア). The map shows, interestingly, a significant river flowing into the (southern) head of the gulf, and otherwise on the eastern (mainland) side there are a few embayments such as those that appear on maps that depict California as an island, where the Colorado and other rivers enter the gulf mid-way through the "strait". This map is cited here for its novelty and as an early Japanese perspective.] [BIBLIOGRAPHICAL NOTE: OCLC record 851880447, as found on WorldCat online, lists the 3-volume title, "Tenkyo Wakumon Chukai : illustrated astronomy", with authors "Irie Heima; Wakanaya Kohei", publisher "Yedo : Kangyuha" (no date), with the notation, "Includes map of North America with Baja California connected at the south rather than the north." No other WorldCat record includes this notation, although there are records for similar editions.] [In Japanese.]

[. . .] On our best maps much of its [the Colorado River’s] route is still a blank space; but a scientific party, mostly young men from Illinois, headed by professor Powell, is now on an exploring expedition, partly to enlarge their knowledge and recruit their health, but mainly to solve the mystery of the Upper Colorado and its wonderful canyon, by attempting to pass through it in boats or rafts—a passage which has as yet only been successfully accomplished by one man, whose adventures in the gorge form one of the most fascinating stories of peril and hair-breadth escapes we ever remember reading.” Concludes with remarks on the James White affair.]

The legend continues in contrived and mingled (mangled) fashion, especially peculiar given the date of publication: “—Unapproached in magnificence are the cañons of Colorado, which for more than a thousand miles of length rise not less than from a thousand feet to twelve hundred feet in perpendicular cliffs; and the Grand Cañon, for more than two hundred miles, has no rocks less than four thousand feet high. At the junction of the Grand and Green rivers there is produced a flood believed to be equal in volume to Niagara. Meeting in a narrow gorge, more than two thousand feet deep, at the place where the cañons of Colorado begin, its waters dash on to the First Cataract, a descent made with a velocity truly awful, the rush checked here and there by rocks, thus forming whirlpools. Where the walls of the chasm approach more nearly, the haste of the flood is augmented to a speed calculated at a mile in eighty seconds. Williams Cañon combines the beautiful with the sublime.”]

[“San Bernardino, Cal.—Plans are being made to install a telephone system in the Mojave desert. The route includes a line from Needles to San Bernardino, also down the west side of the Colorado river to the Santa Fe bridge, and thence to Parker. Another line will extend from Ibex, a station on the Santa Fe, to Searchlight, Nev., and still another will reach from Barstow to Johannesburg and Kramer. Other lines under contemplation will take in all the towns along the Salt lake as far as Las Vegas, from which place a wire will be built to Bullfrog and thence to Tenopah.” (ENTIRE ITEM)]

1906 2.26240 [Proposed cableway.] Engineering News, 55(16) (April 19): 447. [“An item has been sent out to the press by the publicity department of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe relating to the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. We quote it in full as follows: [¶] ‘It is proposed to stretch a heavy cable across the granite gorge of the Colorado River, from bank to bank, and attach to same a movable steel cage, in which passengers will be transported. The distance from rim to rim in mid air, as the crow flies, is thirteen miles. The distance going down the north wall, crossing the river on the cable and ascending the north wall, is fully twenty miles.’ [¶] Those of our readers familiar with the mathematics of the catenary curve may be interested to compute the total vertical drop of a cable with a length of 20 miles and its points of support 13 miles apart. Those who are not can easily see by a roughly approximate computation that the lowest point of such acable would be several miles lower than the Colorado River at the bottm of the gorge. It may be added that as a cable of such a span, even if made of high-grade steel wire, would barely support its own weight, no passengers are likely to take the dizzy ride for some time to come.” (ENTIRE ITEM)] [Note that there is some confusion with the Engineering News statement, which seems that the proposed cableway would be from rim to rim. This was clarified by the Santa Fe’s advertising agent, W. H. Simpson (1906, ITEM NO. 2.26241).]

["One of the accountants in the employ of Fred Harvey, the public utilities operator at Grand Canyon Park, has the distinction of being America's first incubator bady [sic]. He is 44-year-old, 5-foot 6-inch Perlee Merrill Mathers, who made a premature debut in Lynn, Massachusetts, in 1890 when his mother became frightened over an accident to another son. At birth he weighed but 16 ounces and was eight inches long. [¶] In 1890 incubators were just an experiment and the nearest one was in New York. While it was being rushed to the Mathers home Perlee lived in a cigar box for 56 hours, wrapped in cotton. [¶] The baby's survival was of considerable interest to the medical profession and Perlee was to have been exhibited at the 1893 World'[s] Fair in Chicago, but when the Fair was delayed his parents changed their minds and only the incubator was sent. Now Mr. Mathers is searching for the incubator for a keepsake." Approximately 275 friends and associates from near and far were in attendance as well as their two children and their spouses—Lars & Gail Garrison from New York and Eldon & Karen Reyer from Custer Battlefield. The gala affair, the letters, telegrams, remarks, and gifts were indeed a tribute to the contributions these two people have made at the many places they have lived and worked. We are all 'richer' for having known them. We hope they return to Grand Canyon often and the years ahead provide much happiness to this wonderful couple." (ENTIRE NOTE)]

NO DATE 2.30744 National Park Service photographs : the large HD photographs with annotations. [No imprint], [232] pp. [Includes Boulder Dam and Grand Canyon.] [An on-demand publication.] [A modern piracy. Volume acquired new in October 2021 from Amazon.com. Title from the cover; no title-page, no title on spine. Volume comprises black-and-white photos with captions; no photographer’s credit, nor any information regarding context or provenance. Author indicated on Amazon web page as "Sherita Purviance" (who may have produced this volume). Cover depicts a stock color photo with graphical art superimposed. Pages seemingly with captions and no photos are only poorly designed "chapter" headings. Description from the Amazon.com posting (October 2021): “This book is a collection of the author’s photos taken for the National Park Service. In 1941, the author was employed by the U.S. Department of the interior [sic] to photograph the National Parks in the Western United States. The photographs would be part of a 'Mural Project' for the Interior Department's new museum in Washington, D.C. The Interior's mural project would allow him to travel and photograph the National Parks[.]" The Interior Department's mural program was, as is well known, the work of Ansel Adams.]

[17] The Samuel Adams who attempted to explore canyon rivers in Colorado (the Blue and Grand Rivers) at about the same time as the explorations of the Green and Colorado Rivers by John Wesley Powell. Adams's reports that pertain only to the upper Colorado River basin explorations are extralimital to this bibliography and thus are not cited. He is not to be confused with Samuel Adams [2], First Assistant Secretary of the Interior in the early 20th century, who is cited in Parts 11 and 12 of this bibliography.
